In spite of all his faults, as judged, perhaps, by an English as well as by an Anglo-Indian standard, Sir R—— T—— is a man of exceptional abilities, and of most exceptional energy. He has exercised powers of life and death over millions. He has ruled provinces and kingdoms with an almost autocratic sway. He has done this in India on the whole with success; but his best friend cannot say that a similar success has attended his efforts in the House of Commons. "Why is this? First, because the Anglo-Indian is a writing animal, not a speaking animal. Second, because the very fact of his successful career in India has accustomed him to treat the public as his inferior, and has possibly given him a manner for which the average member of the House of Commons cannot make allowances."

This is a little rough on Sir R—— T——, but Colonel Hughes-Hallett is kind enough to add:—

Yet, while acknowledging that the Anglo-Indian is unpopular in England, it is nothing but the mere truth to say that he is a harmless creature, doing his work in the world honestly and zealously, patient beyond compare under injustice and suffering, only plaintively bleating a disclaimer when held up to execration now and then by Mr. John Bright, Mr. Blunt, or by some other person equally conversant with Indian affairs, as a combination of Simon Legree and Reginald Front de Bœuf. Nay, if any proof be wanting of his loyalty to the State it is found in the fact that he has for fourteen years borne, with that "patient shrug which is the badge of sufferance of all his tribe," a wrong which would long ago have driven any other body of men to absolute mutiny.

It is possible that the Anglo-Indians will not altogether accept Colonel Hughes-Hallett's description of them as correct; they are not all harmless or sheep-like, even if they have not yet mutinied on account of the depreciated Rupee. And they are quite able and willing to fight their own battle in this matter, and have, indeed, been doing so for a long time in the Press at home and in India. This will not, however, lessen their sense of obligation to any champion of their cause who can get their wrongs righted. Colonel Hallett's proposal is that the pay of all Anglo-Indian officials in India—and we presume that he includes the military with the civil element—should be for the future in sterling at a fixed rate of 1s. 9d. per Rupee, and he puts it in this way. For example:—A man drawing 800 Rupees a month would not be paid those 800 coins, but would be credited with 800 times 1s. 9d., the equivalent of which would be paid him in Rupees at the exchange of the day. If the exchange were at 1s. 6d. he would draw 933 Rupees, whereas, if it were to go back to par, he would draw only 700 Rupees. He is of opinion that not a single official, from Peshawur to Cape Comorin, would hesitate to accept this compromise. Perhaps not to-day, but hope may not be altogether dead within the long suffering Anglo-Indian breast, and we should be glad to hear what "a man like Sir R—— T——" says to this suggestion of a settlement for all time of the very vexed question.

THE LAW'S DELAYS AND EXPENSES IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I invite your attention to page 163 of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 9th of last month.

The Editor already anticipates the ruin of the heir of one of the most loyal Natives who assisted us during the Mutiny—the Rajah of Bulrampoor, who saved the life of Sir Charles Wingfield.

The Rajah's estate is now compared to Dickens's description of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce.

No fault can be attributed to the late Rajah in his mode of bequeathing his property. He sought the best advice—was advised by a Scotch gentleman of high standing.

Why should the large property of a loyal Native nobleman be distributed among a large number of lawyers, both Native and European, both in India and in London? The Queen's Counsel will expect their share of the vast sums involved—vast, as Sir Horace Davey said at their Lordship's Board, to be extracted out of a young boy and two ignorant women.

The public in England know not the comments which are being made in Native society. Is the Queen's Jubilee to be marked and remembered by a mockery of justice to the Bulrampoor family, who would have been honoured by Her Majesty if she had been truly informed of the facts?

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

FIELD telegraph offices have been opened between Kyundoung and Katha, on the Bhamo line, at Mona-Kone, on the Thayetmyo-Malum line, and at Tatabin, in the Shwebo district.

ORDERS having been issued by Government to raise a police force of 2,000 men for service in Burma from Native regiments of the three presidencies and the Hyderabad Contingent now in Burma, the Commander-in-Chief desires to impress upon the commanding officers of the following regiments—7th Bengal Cavalry, 1st Madras Lancers, 3rd Hyderabad Cavalry, 2nd, 11th, and 26th Bengal Infantry, 3rd Gorkha Light Infantry, 1st Madras Pioneers, 12th, 23rd, and 25th Madras Infantry—the urgent need of operating heartily with Government in this matter, and of furthering volunteering for the new police corps by all means in their power. It is only by the establishment of an efficient police that a reduction can be effected in the force now serving in Burma.

THE tenure of appointment of Assistant Superintendent of Factories, held by Captain S. G. D. Smith, Royal Artillery, has been extended to May 31, 1890.

THE Government of India has sanctioned the grant of three months' English pay of his rank to Captain C. Pulley, 3rd Gurkha Light Infantry, on account of a wound received by him in action near Lamaing, in Upper Burma, on Nov. 24, 1886.

THE services of the following officers have been placed, as a temporary measure, at the disposal of the Chief Commissioner, Burma, for employment in the police battalions in Upper Burma, pending the necessary authority from Government:—As Commandants: Captain H. F. Farrant, 25th Madras Infantry; Lieutenant R. M. Rainey, 1st Madras Pioneers; Lieutenant R. P. Colomb, 25th Bengal Infantry. As Second in Command: Lieutenant A. T. Young, 12th Madras Infantry.

CAPTAIN ALEXANDER, Squadron Commander of the 6th Bombay Cavalry, has been appointed Cantonment Magistrate at Neemuch, vice Colonel Grant, who has reverted to military duty.

THE following officers have been granted leave out of India for one year:—Colonel G. S. Ostrehan, Assistant Commissary General; Lieutenant-Colonel G. R. Reay, 13th Bombay Infantry; and Major T. Teed, Assistant Commissary General, second class. Colonel Reay's leave is on medical certificate.

THE W.I.R.A. MEETING AT BANGALORE.

At last the decision of the Council of the W.I.R.A. regarding the local meeting in December last has been received, and, as everybody who knew anything of the facts expected, the scores have been disallowed. A letter was recently received by the local honorary secretary from Mr. Dorabjee Pudumjee, the honorary secretary at Poona, intimating the decision of the Council, and thanking him for the promptness with which he had brought to its notice the irregularity which has led to the disqualification of all the competitors without distinction. The honorary secretary further adds that the letter of the local secretary, suggesting a strict inquiry into the matter, so as to exonerate innocent men, had been circulated among the members of the Council. This is as it should be, but we cannot understand the unreasonably long delay that has occurred in the Council's arriving at a conclusion that was foregone. The matter was communicated to the honorary secretary at Poona immediately after the meeting there, about the 24th December, and more than a month elapses before the unfortunate competitors are informed of the result, and are at liberty to take such action as will clear their reputations in this scandalous affair. In the meantime the station and its competitors have been blackguarded throughout India in unmeasured but perfectly justifiable terms, which certainly could not have been pleasant reading for the unfortunates.

We might as well state authoritatively what the irregularity was. The scores made on the 2nd (500 and 600 yards) and 3rd class (200 yards) targets were nothing extraordinary: there was one 34 at 200 yards, and a 33 at 500 yards, out of a possible 34—common enough scores at those distances, as the late S.I.R.A. meeting proves. But at the 1st class ranges (700 to 1,000 yards) there was some very tall shooting, so tall, indeed, that with the added points, allowed by match rifles to the Martini-Henry, the totals were well over the highest possible scores attainable. This led to an examination of the target, with the result that the target showed fewer bull's-eyes and more outers than the score registers contained. That the registers were correctly kept there can be no doubt, for, with all the seven competitors at the firing point watching, each in his own interest, the register keeper, it was impossible to cheat, even if there had been a wish to do so. The only conclusion left is that the marker in some way knew who the firer of a particular shot was, and marked him bull's-eyes, whether his shots were outers or misses. Had the marker been drunk and incapable he would have distributed his favours all round, but he did not. Had he been a thorough rogue in grain he would have squared the target by giving other men's bull's-eyes to his patron and crediting the latter's bad shots to them. The plot, if plot there was, failed by reason of its amazing stupidity. We trust that the forthcoming inquiry will clear up this most discreditable scandal.—Bangalore Spectator.

RAILWAY EXTENSION IN INDIA AND BURMA.

On Friday evening, at the Rooms of the Society of Arts, John-street, Adelphi, Mr. Holt Hallett read a paper on "Railways Extension in India and Burma and Their Connection with China." Mr. J. M. Maclean, M.P., presided, and there were among those present Sir Juland Danvers, Sir Richard Mead, Surgeon-General Manifold, Mr. Hyde Clarke, and Mr. A. Bryce.

Mr. Holt Hallett introduced his subject by referring to the over-production from which in a great degree our trade was suffering. We must acquire fresh customers by opening new markets. Those markets were within our reach in India and Burma, and unless they were opened, and our trade carried into them and into the vast unopened markets of China and Indo-China, many of our manufactories must be closed. As we lowered our prices foreign tariffs were raised, and would continue to rise until our wares were generally shut out from Continental markets. The American tariffs at present varied between 50 and 265 per cent. on articles of import. Would it not have been better for the extension of our commerce if the £400,000,000 that we had invested in United States railways had been invested in those of India? India was a willing customer. Enrich her by spending money on her railways, and she would repay us by taking ever-increasing quantities of our manufactures, and would certainly prove an inexhaustible mine of wealth to this country. Steamers and railways had already done a great deal for the revenues, trade, protection, enrichment, and advancement of the people of India. Since 1879 the export of wheat from that country had leapt from 2,000,000 to 56,000,000 bushels, and the figures were not less significant regarding other exports. In India exports had increased 57.49 per cent., while those of England, France and Germany had declined. Whole spaces existed in India to the extent of the whole arena of England and Wales upon which there was not a single line of rails. The only excuse the Indian Government had for doing nothing and allowing the rupee to fall to 1s. 6d. in value was that they had a fear of loss from exchange. Of the sums expended on Indian railways one-fourth was spent on materials in England and three-fourths for construction in India. Therefore, as the greater part of the expenditure would be in silver, the actual expenditure would not be so great when the rupee was valued at 1s. 6d. as it would if valued at 2s. For instance, if only 66,667 miles of railway were required, that mileage could be constructed for £325,000,000 when the rupee stood at 1s. 6d., while £400,000,000 would be required if it were at 2s. The construction of railways when the value of the rupee was low was therefore decidedly advantageous to the Indian Government. As to the increased liabilities that would be incurred by the Government carrying out such an extensive scheme for railways, he would point out that a railway constructed in the first year would, in the ordinary course, pay 1 per cent., the third year 2 per cent., and taking the average of Indian railways, 5.8 per cent. in the eighth year. If a policy of Government guarantees were adopted, the depression of trade would vanish and the revenues of India greatly increase. Railways in India and Burma were of great importance to the cotton and yarn industries. To those two countries in 1884 was exported nearly one-half of our total export. Were it not for railways in India our cotton, iron, and steel industries would be depressed to a greater degree than what they were. And knowing how useful railways in India had proved not only to commerce, civilisation, and to the welfare of the Natives of India, but also in times of war, famine, and insurrection, was it not pitiful that the Secretary of State and the Government of India could complacently look on and refuse to expedite their construction by such concessions as would enable them to be placed on the stock markets of the world—(hear, hear). He hoped that the new Secretary of State for India would resolutely follow up his words at Ashton-under-Lyne, where he stated that he wanted the people of England to come forward and say they would advance money to extend the railway system of India. There were at least three courses open to the Government to increase its public works establishment, to call in the aid of construction companies and afterwards decrease its liability by leasing the lines, or to offer such terms to private enterprise as would enable syndicates to float the railways at par upon the market—(hear, hear). What he had said with reference to the railways of India was also applicable to Burma, without which, he thought, it was impossible to bring out the resources of that country or even to protect it. He concluded by pointing out by means of a map the routes of proposed railways from the mouth of the Irrawaddy, in the Gulf of Martaban, to connect with the Indian railways, and also from Bangkok to Chung Ching, thus connecting Siam and Burma and India with China.

Sir Juland Danvers, Mr. Maclean, M.P., Mr. Hyde Clarke, Mr. Kimble, Mr. Mowit, and Mr. A. Bryce also took part in the discussion of the subject. A vote of thanks to Mr. Holt Hallett terminated the proceedings.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDs, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is necessary, as many persons have been purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he testified to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th. 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY,
GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."
From STILES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-estimated medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, STILES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE IN NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athlone Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to take over and carry on the valuable and extensive Foundry and Engineering Works at Roorkee, in the North-West Provinces of India, which for many years past have been in successful operation under the Public Works Department of the Government of India, and have been secured by the present Vendors under contract with the Government of India, in pursuance of its policy of withdrawal from competition with private enterprise.

The Property is most conveniently situated on the banks of the Ganges Canal, and by a recently opened branch of the Oude and Rohilkund line, has been placed in direct communication with the entire railway system of India.

The works are erected upon about 13½ acres of land, the freehold of which will be conveyed to the Company. There are a complete Foundry capable of casting 20 tons per day, Smithy and Turning and Fitting Shops, Carpenters' and Pattern Shop. The class of business which has hitherto been done by the workshops is the Manufacture of Machinery, Ironwork, Bridges, Canal Boats, Dock Gates, and all kinds of Appliances and Utensils for the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and Rajputana. There are, also, a special Department for the manufacture of Mathematical Instruments, and ample machinery and tools (chiefly by WHITWORTH & Co.), with all requisites for general engineering work.

No competing establishment of any importance exists nearer than Bombay and Calcutta for this growing class of business, and the stock of special patterns and apparatus ensures the continuance of support from the already long-established connection with the public as well as the Government.

The Government valuation in April, 1886, showed that the Block, Plant, Stores (price not at old Stock Rates, but at the then ruling market rates), London Invoices and Supplies, amounted to Rs. 13,85,078, for which sum, converted at 1s. 5½d. per rupee, or £101,000, the Vendors have agreed to transfer the undertaking to the Company. The Vendors' profit will consist of an abatement made to them by the Government on its valuation. The Vendors will pay the whole of the expense attendant upon the negotiations for the purchase and transfer of the property, and of the formation of the Company down to and including the allotment of shares, except brokerage. No other commission or promotion money of any kind whatever will be paid by the Company.

Moneys due on Works in progress and outstanding debts will be paid over by the Company to the Government as and when realised.

The stores will be verified at the time of transfer of the property to the Company by Arbitrators on behalf of the Government and the Vendors, and it is agreed, between the Vendors and the Company, that the above sum of £101,000 shall be reduced in respect of any diminution which at the time for completion may be found to exist as regards the Stores.

The purchase money includes a sum of upwards of 9 lakhs of rupees, or about £66,000 for stores in the shops. This large quantity of Stock has accumulated in consequence of the system of indenting once a year, on the Secretary of State, for supplies sufficient to meet all possible requirements during a whole year. Colonel Jasper O. Maxne, then Secretary to the Government (P. W. Department), remarked (Memorandum of the 3rd Dec., 1885) that "with a private firm or Company the value of stores kept on hand would probably be nearer 3½ lakhs." Mr. Angus Campbell, the Manager for the Government, states (Letter of the 20th of Feb., 1886) as follows:—"I think that if these workshops were in the hands of a private firm they would pay well. The great drawback at present is the difficulty in getting material; we must get it through the Secretary of State and we cannot get it quickly, nor can we be sure when we will have it. This prevents us going in for large contracts, and it also forces us to have an amount of stock on hand out of all proportion to the value of work turned out; we have from 8 to 9 lakhs' worth; 1 lakh would be enough, or say 2 at most." The Directors are of opinion that, with the present improved facilities of transit and of transmitting orders by wire, the estimate of 2 lakhs for stock of stores will be found sufficient. The surplus of £50,000 will, therefore, be available for realization; and no difficulty is anticipated in gradually reducing the stock accordingly. This realization will form a fund which may be applied for the redemption of the Debentures, or otherwise, from time to time in the interests of the Company.

The Government accounts are made up annually to the 31st March. In the year 1885-86, in view of the early transfer of the business, work was curtailed and concentrated on the completion of current orders; no new advances were accepted, large advances previously received from customers were repaid in cash, instead of being worked off at a profit." (Government Resolution of 29th Nov., 1886.)

1883-84	1,69,987.
1884-85	1,20,441. * Allowing for Rs. 22,607 (special and exceptional charges).
Total	Rs. 5,76,175.

Deducting nearly a lakh of rupees for a somewhat abnormal demand for a special class of work in the two years 1882-3, and for a fair proportion of bad debts, the Directors believe that this total may be taken at Rs. 4,80,000 or an average of Rs. 1,20,000 per annum, equivalent, at 1s. 6d., to £9,000. This view accords with that of Col. Maxne, who added, "There is no reason to suppose that work will decrease, and under proper management an average annual profit of Rs. 1,20,000 may reasonably be expected."

In December, 1885, the Government observed: "with the advent of the Oude and Rohilkund Railway Extension, however, it may fairly be expected that a considerable impulse will be given to the foundry business, and from the Table under consideration (showing the transactions of the shops for the last 11 years), it would appear that the out-turn of the shops could be practically doubled without increasing the normal working expenditure."

As regards the profits for the current year, during which work has been resumed the following telegram has been received by the Vendors, dated Allahabad, 25th January, 1887:—"Your telegram 22nd. Superintendent Workshops reports all Departments fully employed, and anticipates net profits over one lakh this financial year."

Looking at these figures the Directors anticipate that, when fairly started under the new management, the works will yield a net annual profit sufficient for the payment of

6 per cent. on Debentures	£50,000 = £3,000
and 9 per cent. on Shares	£60,000 = £5,400
	£8,400.

Without assuming any higher profits the dividend upon the shares would advance to 14 per cent., when the Debentures shall have been redeemed, but independently of this, the Directors have no doubt that the profits will largely increase. It may be added that the Government of the North-West Provinces has promised to give the Company all the assistance in its power.

One Member of the Board (Mr. Prince) having been formerly in charge of these works under Government, has an intimate knowledge of the business; and Mr. Angus Campbell, "who for over twenty years managed the concern and brought it to its present flourishing condition," has offered to take charge of the works on behalf of the Company, and with the perfect freedom which the Manager will be allowed to exercise in the way of canvassing for business (from which he was strictly debarred by the Government), it is confidently anticipated that the work will be greatly extended, and the profits very materially increased. All the departments of the workshops are fully employed, and the works are in a healthy state as a "going concern."

The Debentures now proposed to be issued will be a first charge upon the undertaking.

The following contracts have been made:—

1. Contract with the Government of India constituted by various letters and telegrams, which have passed between Messrs. Benn, Ashley & Co., of Bombay (the corresponding firm of Messrs. Bevis, Russell & Co., of London), and the Government or their officers.
2. Dated 1st March, 1887, between the Vendors and this Company.

If no allotment is made the deposit paid on application will be returned in full. Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained of the Bankers, Solicitors, and at the Offices of the Company.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles, and of form of Debentures, and of the proposed Trust Deed for securing the Debentures, and copies of full particulars of the said letters and telegrams, as well as Illustrated Price List of Articles sold at the Works, may be inspected or obtained at the Offices of the Solicitors. The Debentures will be payable to the Registered Holder.

Application will be made in due course for an official quotation on the Stock Exchange.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 14, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 25th February; from Allahabad and Madras to the 23rd February; and from Calcutta to the 22nd February.

TELEGRAMS received from all parts of the country show that the Queen's Jubilee has been celebrated with great enthusiasm everywhere. At the Presidency towns and the capitals of the principal Native States the demonstrations were of an imposing character.

THE Governor in Council has placed on record his appreciation of the loyal enthusiasm displayed by the citizens of Bombay on the occasion of the celebration of the Jubilee.

DEFERRING to the wishes of Hindoos and Parsees the Mahomedan butchers of Bombay did not slaughter cows on Jubilee day. In a Resolution on the subject the Government commends their action as showing in what harmony the different races live in Bombay, while in other parts of India the killing of cows is often a cause of riot and bloodshed.

DURING the Jubilee illuminations at Umballa the splendid mess-house of the Cheshire Regiment caught fire, and was burnt to the ground. Most, if not all, of the valuable mess property, however, was saved.

ONE of the most notable celebrations of the Jubilee was that in Peshin, where the ceremony consisted in sending an engine for the first time over the four miles of tunnels and viaducts that take the railway through the Chuppar rift and over the Chuppar bridge, a work 600 feet long and 300 high. Captain B. Scott, R.E., was the engineer in charge.

A GOOD deal of fighting with dacoits is reported from Upper Burma. Several casualties have occurred on our side.

A LAMENTABLE occurrence has happened at the Mahaboung police thanah, which was only recently burned by dacoits, who killed the guard. The sergeant ordered the Punjabees to proceed against the dacoits lurking in the neighbourhood, but they refused, and, on the sergeant remonstrating, shot him dead.

A BRISK trade is being carried on with the Shans and Burmese at Bhamo.

THE negotiations with the fugitive Wuntho Tsawbwa continues.

A FIRE has occurred at Mandalay, destroying sixty houses, chiefly inhabited by European and Eurasian clerks, and a long range of gharry stalls.

IT is understood that Mr. Crosthwaite, on arrival in Burma, will proceed almost immediately to Mandalay.

THE Viceroy will probably pay a visit to Dehra Dun on his journey up-country to Simla.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has left Calcutta for Bombay, whence he goes direct to Umballa, subsequently going to the Peshin Valley to inspect the frontier fortifications.

GENERAL CHESNEY goes to Peshin towards the end of March, in time to meet the Commander-in-Chief there.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY is due in Calcutta on the 18th March, when he will take his seat in the Council as an incident in drawing his pay. Mr. Elliot Colvin, C.S., at present Assistant to Sir Edward Bradford, will be his private secretary on his becoming Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, whilst Captain Rawlinson's services as aide-de-camp will be continued.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF has issued to the army a general order deploring the death of Sir Charles MacGregor.

MAJOR COOPER, aide-de-camp to the Viceroy, proceeds home on short leave next month owing to ill-health.

SIR RIVERS THOMPSON will open the section of the Assam and Behar Railway through the Parnia district, so far as it has been completed, on the 4th proximo.

MR. H. N. B. ERSKINE, Commissioner in Sind, retires from the service on April 1, being succeeded by Mr. C. B. Pritchard, Commissioner of Customs, who has just returned from furlough.

A MEETING has been held at the Bombay Secretariat to promote the work of the St. John's Ambulance Association. Lord Reay and Lord and Lady Brassey addressed the meeting. Letters were read from their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, sympathising with the movement.

SIR DINSHAW MANECKJEE PETIT, High Sheriff of Bombay, has offered Rs. 1,25,000 for the establishment of a Medical College in connection with the Cama Hospital, or the enlargement and improvement of the Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy Hospital.

COLONEL W. TREVOR, having made over charge of the Public Works Secretariat to General Hancock, has left Calcutta for England by the steamer Ravenna.

THE NAWAB BCSHEER-UD-DOWLAH proceeds to England next month, and has been deputed to represent the Nizam at the Jubilee celebration on the 20th June. It is said that the Nawab Munir-ul-Mulk will form one of the deputation.

THE Punjab Government have given orders for the preparation of a survey for a line of railway between Puttiala and Batinda, and Mr. W. Macdonald, Executive Engineer, has been deputed to start operations at once. The ground is described as being peculiarly favourable for such a work, there being absolutely no rivers or streams of any magnitude in the entire length of one hundred miles.

THERE will be a special meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council next month, either at Delhi or Umballa, to pass the Punjab Land Bills.

AN additional force of 2,000 police is about to be raised in the Punjab for Burma.

THE GOVERNMENT AND TECHNICAL EDUCATION.—In spite of many plausible arguments, and still more plausible theories, we cannot help thinking that the old way of building pyramids was the best—namely, by first laying a sufficiently broad foundation, and then working upwards to the culminating point. In one way the Government studiously neglects to cultivate the demand which technical education might help to meet, and without which it will avail nothing. What has been done to suppress the glaring scandal of purchasing Government stores through the India Office? During the first eight months of the current official year over 289 lakhs worth of stores were imported by Government from England, including 21 lakhs worth of apparel, nearly 5 lakhs worth of hardware and cutlery, 4½ lakhs worth of leather and leather manufactures, nearly 3 lakhs worth of stationery, 9½ lakhs worth of woollen piece goods, and over 5½ lakhs worth of materials for telegraph construction; to say nothing of all sorts of machinery and iron work. Put a stop to the perquisites of the India Office, to family contracts, and to jobbery in a hundred forms, and a large proportion of the stores now imported from England could be manufactured and obtained in India. With the impetus thus given to Indian industries technical education would become one of the requirements of the day, and not merely the idle dream of well meaning but impractical theorists.—Civil and Military Gazette.

Notes of the Week.

AFTER pleasure comes pain. The outpourings of the Press of India have lately been only of Jubilee rejoicings, and of the universal gratification felt by all classes during the happy days of celebration. But now that the tamasha is over, the fireworks exploded, and the illuminations gone out, another feeling has come upon the Editorial souls. The manner in which the Jubilee honours have been distributed have given, we are told, "universal dissatisfaction."

ALLAHABAD is not the universe, but the local journal considers that it has a right to tell the world what its opinion is of Royal favour. The Pioneer says that "the North-West has little reason to be grateful for the share of orders that has fallen to it. Lord Lytton, when assisting in the institution of the Indian Empire, proposed by means of it to confer some sort of public distinction on prominent members of the non-official community. Their practical exclusion from the list may be accepted in evidence that the proposal is no longer favoured."

BOMBAY also is aggrieved. The Bombay Gazette is "not surprised to hear that the paucity of the numbers of the decorations placed by higher authorities at the disposal of the Bombay Government has given rise to a good deal of animadversion. The Municipality has not been recognised either in the person of its Chairman or in that of the Municipal Commissioner."

It was not likely that Bengal would be content. The Englishman says:—"The list, as far as it goes, is excellent, but it will commonly be regarded as not going far enough. There are certain omissions, notably the Calcutta High Court and the Volunteers, to say nothing of certain conspicuous individual omissions which are surely to be regretted."

MADRAS, of course, has not yet awakened to a sense of its wrongs, but will do so no doubt in time. It is very hard to distribute honours in India so as to please everybody. But of all the strange complaints which have come by the present mail upon this subject, the strangest, perhaps, is that which charges Sir George Birdwood as having been the compiler of the list. A correspondent writes to the Times of India:—"Show me the list and I'll show you who drew it up." That's the way the Jubilee honours are spoken of, and my particular exponent of this ingenious theory at once underlined the names of Sir George Birdwood and Mr. Fitzgerald. Sir George, I was forced to own from the number of capital letters accumulating after his name, must often have had a finger in the pie before. Mr. Fitzgerald is only beginning. But every young gentleman who spends a few hours a day in the India Office, copying letters, believes, like the fly on the wheel, that he is driving the coach—of Indian administration."

THE writer of the above suggests the establishment of a separate order of merit for the India Office clerks, as "there might then be some chance of the Indian decorations being given to the actual administrators of India, whether English or Native. We poor devils who grill out here have no chance against the gentlemen, young or old, who happen to stand at the centre of the board."

ALL this execrable display of temper makes its appearance in the columns of the Anglo-Indian Press. So far as we have looked into the vernacular papers we do not find the same grumbling, but these will naturally take the hint, and follow in the discontented strain.

It is pleasanter to go from words to deeds. The Maharaja of Alwar has given the splendid donation of Rs. 50,000 towards Lady Dufferin's fund, and other Native noblemen and gentlemen have contributed liberally. It is stated that it has been impossible to meet all the demands for the subscription Jubilee cards for this purpose.

AN interesting feature of the Jubilee celebrations at Delhi on the 16th ult. was a zenana meeting, which was attended by some 400 Native ladies. A number of European ladies, including several missionaries, were also present. A grand-daughter of the King of Delhi read an illuminated address to the Queen, which was heard in great silence. Purjah was strictly observed, all gates and doors being closed, except one for entrance. A silver pendant in the form of a V. I. was given to each Native lady. Afterwards there was a magic-lantern display.

A CALCUTTA paper makes a novel suggestion regarding the final presentation to Her Majesty of the Jubilee addresses from India. "Why not reserve the submission of the Indian addresses to Her Majesty until the grand Jubilee celebration in England?" asks our contemporary, and then send them home in an Indian Marine steamer—or an Imperial troopship, if none of the Indian Marine boats possesses sufficient cargo space—in charge of a deputation, including a prominent Anglo-Indian, a Hindoo, and a Mahomedan from each province, and with a guard composed of selected men from the different branches of the Native Army? The ceremony of presentation might be made a big thing of in connection with the English tamasha; and such distinction given to their addresses could not fail to be highly gratifying to the whole Indian people."

SHAREHOLDERS in Indian breweries may rejoice. The Government of India has agreed to a system of ten years' contracts with the six Indian brewery companies, in place of the ordinary terms of from three to five years. In fixing the rate for the next ten years, however, Government had to provide for one important contingency. Supposing Sterling Exchange should improve, Government would lose more or less of what it now saves by the difference in cost between Indian and imported malt liquor; whilst the brewer would be a gainer by the reduced price to him of the machinery, hops, casks, and what-not that he has to get from home. This difficulty will be met by the adoption of a sliding scale of rates, varying year by year, as the figure of the Secretary of State's drawings in India may vary. The saving to Government by the new arrangement is variously estimated at from fifteen to twenty lakhs of rupees for the ten years, as the difference between the price they are paying and what, on the average, they will pay.

MR. HERBERT GLADSTONE, M.P., has been shooting in Malda as the guest of the Collector. The party is reported to have bagged thirteen deer, besides smaller game. Mr. Gladstone has sought to improve his mind during his visit with the latest information available locally on such subjects as education, the Vernacular papers, savings banks, and the excise.

THE Indian Government has resolved not to issue the reserve stock of Martini-Henry rifles to the Native regiments of the First Army Corps as it recently proposed to do, because it is feared that the distribution of these rifles would create complications with regard to the supply of ammunition, the remainder of the Sepoys being armed with Sniders.

THE case of Duleep Singh is one that calls for attention, if indeed not for immediate inquiry. It is a belief with the general public that the Maharaja has just cause for grievance. There is no doubt now as to the questionable character of the "Treaty of Annexation" by which the Punjab was made to slip into the hands of the British Government. As to the other treaty of 1846, to which His Highness refers, that of Bhyrowal, it is time, for the sake of public satisfaction, that its claims to validity were permanently disposed of one way or the other. We are not sure if the Government's studied indifference in this matter proceeds from the thought that the Maharaja is powerless for mischief or from conscious guilt. It cannot be from the former. The Maharaja's disaffection can be a source of danger to the British Government, and we venture to surmise that Lord Dufferin has recognised this fact in sending away all the Sikh regiments to Burma. There are many Sikhs among those still looking forward to a day of racial regeneration, who regard Duleep Singh as the lawful heir to the Punjab throne. And just now we hear of religious preachers going about the country with the gospel of the Coming Man in the person of Duleep Singh.—The Beaver, Chadermagore.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 13.

Before the separation of the Public Service Commission last week a sub-committee was appointed, consisting of Sir Charles Turner, the Hon. Mr. Quinton, one Hindoo, one Mahomedan, and one Eurasian member, for the purpose of inquiring into the question of the admission of Natives and Europeans into the following departments:—Service accounts, archæology, customs, education, forests, geological survey, jails, opium, postal, police, public works, salt, and telegraphs. Each local government will nominate an additional member selected from the department which is being passed under review. The inquiry will continue during the next few months, and will probably be completed before the entire Commission reassembles in November.

It is a somewhat remarkable circumstance that the Anglo-Indian mercantile and planting communities, although deeply interested in the inquiry proceeding before the Commission, took no steps to have their views represented until the eleventh hour, when two gentlemen whose evidence I summarised last week presented themselves for examination. Considering the vast amount of British capital sunk in Indian commerce and industries it might have been thought that the persons engaged in those industries would have watched with close attention the proceedings of a body charged to investigate and possibly revolutionise the whole system of administration of the country. That they so long failed, to do so can only be attributed to the extraordinary apathy which the Indian non-official community often displays in matters closely affecting its welfare. It may, however, be hoped that the full and striking, albeit somewhat tardily offered, evidence of Sir Alexander Wilson and Mr. Henderson, coupled with the arguments of the letter which the Bengal Chamber of Commerce is understood to have addressed to the Commission, will have the effect of placing the members in a position to give due weight to the views of mercantile men.

The Case of Rukmibhai, the Native lady whose wrongs aroused so general a feeling of sympathy in England and India, is probably fresh in the memory of your readers, but as the case now appears to be on the point of reaching a crisis it may be well to recapitulate the facts briefly. Rukmibhai was married, according to Hindoo usage, at the age of eleven to a youth some years her senior. She remained at her parents' house, was carefully educated, and grew up, according to all accounts, into a refined and highly-cultivated lady. Some eighteen months ago she published in the Times of India under the nom de plume of "A Hindoo Lady," a series of forcible and striking letters on the miseries entailed on her sex in India by the barbarous customs of infant marriage and enforced widowhood. Last year her husband tried to get her to live with him, and on her refusing instituted a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights in the Bombay High Court. The case was tried in the first instance by Mr. Justice Pinhey, when it having been proved that the husband was too poor to support her, was utterly ignorant and uneducated—in fact, a mere coolie—and was, moreover, consumptive, the Judge expressed the opinion that it would be a barbarous, cruel, and revolting thing to compel her to live with such a man. He further held that such suit could not lie under Hindoo law, and dismissed it.

The husband appealed, and the case was argued before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Bayley. Those learned Judges, while expressing their entire sympathy with Rukmibhai, felt compelled to rule that Mr. Justice Pinhey was wrong in law, and remanded the case to the Lower Court for trial on its merits. It has now been reheard before Mr. Justice Farran. Rukmibhai's counsel could only repeat that his client had never consented to the marriage, and never regarded the man as her husband, that the husband was poor, ignorant, and unhealthy, and that if ordered to return to him she would be forced to disobey, and was prepared to take the consequences. The Court had no option save to pass an order that she should join her husband within a month. Should she fail to do so she would be liable to six months' imprisonment. The case has excited much sympathy among the Anglo-Indian community. The English newspapers are publishing articles and letters on the subject, and steps are being taken in Bombay to raise a fund on her behalf. Among the Native community, however, hardly a single voice except that of Mr. Malabari, a Parsee gentleman, has been raised in her favour, and the so-called reformers who agitate loudly for representative institutions, &c., say no word for the alteration of the cruel law which the Bombay Court has been reluctantly compelled to enforce.

The opium revenue of the expiring financial year is likely to be worse than the estimate by about 20 lakhs of rupees. The loss is entirely in Bengal, where the falling off amounts to 42 lakhs, which is partly reduced by the surplus in Bombay of 21 lakhs. This surplus may yet be increased to some extent, as the outturn of the opium crop now on the ground is estimated at about 66,000 chests of provision opium.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has formally opened the Munipore-Purneah section of the Assam-Bihar Railway. In a speech on the occasion he expressed the hope that a few years would witness the completion of an unbroken line of railway connecting Assam with the North-West Provinces on the left bank of the Ganges.

Sir Rivers Thompson is to be entertained at a public dinner in Calcutta on Thursday. He lays down office on the 2nd of April and starts for home next day.

The Viceroy leaves Calcutta for the season on Wednesday.

The term of office of Sir Theodore Hope, which expires in July, has been extended to December.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 13.

From Upper Burma numerous petty fights with dacoits are reported within the last week. In every instance the enemy have been sharply defeated. In three or four of these affairs the dacoits were the assailants, and attacked small parties of our troops.

The Sixth Brigade, under General Low, is very active in pursuing dacoits on the western and eastern bank of the Irrawaddy. General Low has twelve small columns in the field. In view of the approach of the hot weather, he is now busily engaged in preparing and provisioning forts, which his brigade will hold during the hot season.

On the 9th inst., Lieutenant Golightly with some mounted infantry and police suddenly came on Boshway and his gang near Sidotia. The insurgents, who were in some force, held a good position and opened a heavy fire. Lieutenant Golightly by a turning movement drove the enemy out of this position, with a loss of twenty-two killed and many wounded. Boshway escaped to the jungle. On our side one private was wounded.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

LEAVE AND FURLOUGH ANOMALIES.

(Englishman.)

The Civil Leave Code has recently been much discussed by the members of the various services. That these rules were sufficiently liberal at the time they were made, and for some years after, is admitted by all concerned; but there is a general consensus of opinion that the time has come for the relaxation of some of the conditions. The two principal kinds of leave which are at present given to the members of all the services are privilege leave and furlough. The former is allowed to the extent of one month at the end of eleven months' service; it carries full pay, and can be accumulated up to a minimum limit of three months. The latter carries half-pay, and is allowed to the extent of one year out of four, or one year out of eight, according to the class in the public service to which the applicant belongs. Privilege leave, as the name suggests, cannot be claimed as a right; it is, however, granted as far as is conveniently possible, and is extensively taken advantage of to the maximum limit of one-eleventh of the period of active service. Furlough, on the other hand, is claimable as a right. It is as much a part of a public servant's remuneration as is his salary, and within certain limits as laid down in the rules counts as service towards pension. Now, there are some restrictions in regard to these two kinds of leave which might with advantage be removed. One is that privilege leave, as we have pointed out, can only be accumulated up to a maximum limit of three months; another is that privilege leave cannot be taken in continuation of furlough.

When a public servant takes privilege leave he is compelled, under the rules, to return to duty and serve for an arbitrary period of three months before he can avail himself of furlough. The result of this is that the interests of the Public Service suffer during a period of six months. In the first place the locum tenens of the officer who is on privilege leave can scarcely be expected to put his whole strength into another man's work during the first three months, knowing as he does that he can effect nothing in that period which is likely to be commensurate with the effort expended; and, secondly, the original holder of the appointment on his return from privilege leave can scarcely be expected to keep things going for the next three months with his usual zeal and steadiness, looking forward all the time to his furlough. We can conceive of no real or satisfactory reason for not abolishing this restriction, seeing that the reform would entail no increase of public expenditure. The other restriction limits the accumulation of privilege leave to a period of three months. As already pointed out, this description of leave is not claimable as a matter of right, but it is usually granted when asked for. It is constantly accumulated up to the maximum, permissible limit, and by large numbers of the members of the services is made the opportunity of a run to Europe—a visit to home and children. The boon, however, is a most unequal one. To Native or country born public servants it means nearly the full three months of leisure and domestic happiness; to the Englishman, on the other hand, it means either a spell of idleness and weariness in the hills or a short visit of five weeks to his home in England, at the cost of heavy expenditure, and of a long and tiresome journey. What the services ask for is that privilege leave may be permitted to accumulate up to six months, and that it may be taken in continuation of, and before, furlough. We are unable to divine any good reason that would render it inexpedient to grant this concession in full; but if such reason should exist, it might surely be possible at least to modify the rules so that an officer might take an extension of privilege leave up to a maximum limit of six months, such leave being deducted from the furlough to which he is entitled.

The plan adopted by a Government servant in arranging his leave under the present rules generally conforms to a fixed plan. He serves for two years and nine months, and then runs home for three months. On his return he serves another spell of two years and nine months, and again takes three months' privilege leave. He returns to India, serves three months, and then, having completed six years and three months' service, applies for eighteen months and a few days' furlough. On his return he goes through the same routine again, and so on throughout his whole term of service. His ability, however, to avail himself of his eighteen months' furlough will depend on how he is affected by the gold value of the rupee. If he is a member of the Covenanted Civil Service, with a minimum sterling furlough allowance, he will probably be able to take the furlough to which he is entitled in part remuneration for his work. If, however, he belongs to any of the other branches of the public service, he will in the majority of cases find it extremely difficult, or impossible, to go to Europe on half pay received in depreciated rupees, and subject to heavy deductions on account of fund subscriptions and premia on insurances for the future provision for his wife and children. The result is that the ordinary average member of the services, other than that known as the Covenanted Civil Service, is practically debarred from taking this particular portion of the remuneration to which he is as much entitled as he is to his salary. If he, on the other hand, is allowed to accumulate his privilege leave for six months, he will be in the same condition as heretofore, so far as concerns his practical inability to take furlough on half-pay, but he will at least have the satisfaction, at the end of every five years and a-half, of spending four or five months with his children and friends at home, instead of only so many weeks. It will be observed that these demands on behalf of the public servants of the Indian Government are most moderate, and that they involve absolutely no extra expenditure of money. If, as the result of such a concession as we are suggesting, a certain number of public servants habitually refrain from availing themselves of their furlough, the result will practically be a certain saving in that fraction of the whole establishment which at present is necessarily kept up to fill the place of those who are absent on furlough. It may be urged that against this must be set the cost of an increase in the number of those who will in future avail themselves of privilege leave; but we contend that as a matter of fact, privilege leave is, as a general thing, refused only under exceptional circumstances of pressure of work, and that once a man finds that, owing to no fault of his own, he has forfeited any of his class of leave in spite of his efforts to obtain it, he will take very good care to religiously take every day of it to which he in future may be entitled before permitting it to accumulate to the maximum. This matter may fairly be pressed on the attention of Government at the present moment, for, as a Jubilee movement, it has everything to recommend it. Without expenditure of the public money, a great boon might thus be conferred upon the servants of the State, and the present festival might be marked by a benignant reform which will be gratefully appreciated in every branch of the administration.

THE NORTH-EAST FRONTIER COMMAND.

(Pioneer.)

A complete redistribution of troops in the North-East Frontier Command is under consideration by the authorities. There are at present four regiments in Assam, with headquarters at Shillong, Kohima, Silchar, and Debrugurh; and the scheme under discussion is intended to arrange for the quartering of one regiment and one wing with headquarters at Shillong, one regiment and one wing with headquarters at Manipur, one wing at Debrugurh and one wing at Kohima. The wings at Debrugurh and Kohima are to be always kept up at full strength and to be unencumbered with families; that at Silchar will be done away with as a military station, and Kohima and Debrugurh will be reduced as regards numbers to half their strength. On the other hand, Shillong will be strengthened by half a regiment, and a new cantonment will be established at Manipur. This arrangement, it is believed, will considerably consolidate and strengthen our military position in Assam: it has the support of the highest military authorities; and General Gordon, who is better qualified than anyone else to have formed an opinion on the question from the practical point of view, is keenly interested in the matter, and has clearly stated the chief arrangements in its favour in an able dispatch. The essence of the scheme lies in the fact that two regiments are set free and can be kept ready equipped for active operations at any moment, whilst from their geographical positions Manipur and Shillong become strategic points of the first importance from which to strike at any place on the Assam frontier with promptitude, rapidity, and efficiency. The present quartering of a whole regiment in Kohima is a clear waste of military strength, as, owing to the insuperable difficulties in transporting troops from Golaghat to Kohima in the rains, that regiment is practically isolated for four months of the year. Should it ever be necessary to reinforce Kohima, this could be more effectually accomplished from Manipur than Golaghat, as the Kohima-Manipur road, which of late has been considerably improved, is open all the year round. A full wing at Kohima, without encumbrances, is as good as a regiment under ordinary conditions, with men belonging to it on leave and furlough, as well as families to protect. The fort also at Kohima, which has been in progress now for some years, is nearly completed. The Chief Commissioner of Assam is strongly opposed to the plan of quartering troops in Manipur, though he has conceded his objection to withdrawing the wing from Debrugurh. As regards Manipur, his objections are twofold: the loss of prestige to the Maharaja and the poverty of the State. But looking to the present state of Burma there are imperial considerations in the case that seem to be of vastly more consequence than any loss of prestige to the ruler of Manipur, especially when we know that it is wrung from a reluctant people by every conceivable form of tyranny and extortion. Nor is the country poor: inexhaustible supplies of rice could be procured; vegetables thrive; and several kinds of dal are grown. The export in import trade is small on account of the exorbitant greed of the officials and the want of good communication. The remedy is what the measures proposed would help to bring—an improvement in the character of the government, and the construction of roads.

THE TWO NATIVE CANDIDATES FOR PARLIAMENT (Times of India.)

A public meeting, invited by the Bombay Presidency Association, was held on Sunday, Feb. 13th, at the Framjee Cowasjee Institute, to pass a vote of thanks to the Hon. Dadabhai Naoroji and Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose for their exertions on behalf of India at the last parliamentary elections in England. Long before the time fixed for the meeting about two thousand students and young members of the Parsee and Hindoo communities and a few Mahomedans literally took possession of the hall and the surrounding galleries, occupying every inch of space of the room as well as the wooden platform. The two flights of steps on each side of the hall were crowded with young spectators, and the landings were completely blocked by a dense mass of humanity. Hundreds of people had to return after having in vain attempted to squeeze in among the dense crowd, and there were not more than a dozen well-known Native citizens on the platform and in the body of the hall. The Hon. Mr. Dadabhai and Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose, the latter of whom came some fifteen minutes after the appointed hour, received a perfect ovation, but it was with considerable difficulty that they found their way on the platform. Mr. Dinshaw Manockjee Petit, who presided on the occasion, had to be lifted bodily on to the platform as the steps leading to it were swarmed with eager spectators, who were so closely packed that any motion on their part was simply impossible. One gentleman seated on the platform almost fainted, and had to be helped out of the room for a whiff of fresh air. The meeting, before the proceedings amongst members of the audience for good positions commenced, was of a most disorderly character. When a little quiet was restored, the chairman, in introducing the two gentlemen, referred to the manifold way in which they strove to fulfil the object of their noble ambition—a mission which had now become an historical fact, and of which all their countrymen in every part of India were necessarily so proud. The Hon. Dadabhai Naoroji was the first to thank the meeting for the manner in which he and his friend Mr. Ghose were received and the confidence reposed in them. He was, he said, advised that it was extremely desirable that even one or two Natives of India should be in the House of Commons to enable the members to learn the Native view of questions from Natives themselves. They encouraged him distinctly by saying that if by any possibility he could work his way into the House he would certainly be doing a great service not only to India itself, but to a large extent to England also. His experience of a contest, although unsuccessful at Holborn, had more than satisfied him that the British people were willing to help India and give them a fair chance as much as it lay in their power. Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose then addressed the meeting for about three-quarters of an hour, in the course of which he related an account of his defeat at Deptford, which much amused the audience. He said he had against him, in the words used by Mr. Chamberlain, a combination of five P's, namely, the Parnellites, the Protectionists, the Parsons and the Priest, and the Dames and Knights of the Primrose League. He said he very well remembered the enthusiasm and the sympathetic cheers with which he was greeted by thousands and thousands of artisans and working men in the constituency, and when he thought of the emphatic response that met every appeal that he made on behalf of India, he was overpowered with the sense of gratitude and he could not but come to a deliberate conviction that the masses of the English people were not at all inclined to perpetrate injustice to the Indian Empire; but that they only need be satisfied that the demands they made were just and necessary, and that as soon as they were convinced of that they would not be slow to lend them a helping hand. The mere mention of names, like those of Sir Richard Temple, Mr. Maclean and Sir Roper Lethbridge was received with loud and prolonged hisses and groans, whereas the names of Sir W. Wedderburn, who was present at the meeting, Lord Ripon, Mr. Wordsworth, and Mr. Digby met with rapturous cheers. Both Mr. Dadabhai and Mr. Ghose did not despair at the failure they had met, but hoped for success at some future time. On the motion of the Hon. K. T. Telang the meeting passed by acclamation their most heartfelt thanks to Messrs. Dadabhai and Lal Mohun Ghose for the disinterested and great exertions which they made in England at the last general election in the interest of India. Mr. Hormusjee Dadabhoi, in an eloquent speech, spoke of Mr. Dadabhai as a plain and persuasive speaker, and described Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose as a give-and-take sort of a gentleman, who would, when occasion needed, tuck up his sleeves and say "come one, come all." Mr. N. G. Chandavalkar, in thanking the chairman, observed that they all hoped the Jay would soon come when they would see him knighted.

MR. EDWARD STACK.

(Pioneer.)

The death of Mr. Edward Stack closes a career that seemed certainly destined—if there is any certainty in merit—to be a brilliant one. Belonging properly to the Civil Service of these Provinces, he was carried away by Mr. Charles Elliott, who had had opportunities of appreciating his ability to Assam, and after some years in the Secretariat there, was chosen when a Department of Agriculture was instituted for the Province to be its first Director. For many months past he had been complaining of his health, but there was nothing to show his ailment serious, and he talked cheerfully of what he would see and do in Australia, and especially of judging for himself of the fabled richness of the Silvertown mines. He had always been a student of Australian economics; and it appears to have been just before reaching the land in which he took so keen an interest that he has succumbed to disease of which the climate of Assam had laid the seeds. His loss is a heavy one to his service and to the country. A man of fifteen years' standing can seldom in the circumscribed conditions of an Indian career in these days have made a very wide reputation; but Mr. Stack was known to all who had in any way come across him as a man of most unusual power. His special talent was as a linguist. In the matter of Oriental languages he was literally nulla non donandu' lauru. There was hardly any that he did not know better than most men are contented to know one, besides being a good classical scholar, and intimately acquainted with the language and literature of all the principal countries of Europe. Russian and even the Turki were included in his capacious list. It might have been thought the place for such a man was a University chair, had he not also been an exceptionally good officer in the ordinary sense of the phrase. His work on "Settlements," which appeared some four or five years ago, and was warmly and deservedly commended by the Government of India, sufficiently attests this. Nor with all his industry and knowledge was he in the least a bookworm. Active in body as in mind, it is only a short time ago that he made a ride through the length of Persia to satisfy his taste for travel and adventure. In short, if we catalogue the qualities of the ideal Indian officer—ability and originality coupled with sound judgment; versatility; that sympathy with the country which never fails to follow an intellectual interest in the questions it presents to us; an active mind and an active body—we should have found them all in Mr. Stack. Only that last requisite, a strong constitution, was wanting; but its absence has cost the country the loss before his usefulness was fully developed of a public servant, the like of whom no system of competition or selection will produce more than once or twice in a decade.

ATHLETIC CIVILIANS.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Among the immense mass of evidence given to the Public Service Commission one suggestion, that has by no means received its due amount of attention, stands forth conspicuously distinguished for its downright practical common sense. We refer to the proposal of Professor Wordsworth, that marks should be given in the Civil Service Examination for proficiency in gymnastics, riding, and military drill. It is generally admitted that in the Indian Civil Service courage, activity and good health are qualifications at least as important as the possession of intellectual ability. Strength and courage can be quite as easily tested as brain power. Therefore there is no earthly reason why marks for physical excellence should not be given in the Civil Service Examination. In fact, there is good reason to hold that the physical examination would be much more easily arranged than the mental examination. It would certainly be much less expensive. Some of the best scholars in England have to be procured to conduct the present purely intellectual examination, and have no doubt to be amply remunerated for their time and trouble. An intelligent drill sergeant would suffice for the application of a few physical tests to all the candidates. It would be premature to go minutely into what various items should be admitted into the programme, except so far as to show that there is no insuperable difficulty to be contended with in the matter. Messrs. Kemp and Co. used to have on their premises a machine which registered in a numerical form the striking power of the human blow. There are similar machines which test in a moment the amount of weight that any individual could lift. These two tests together would give a very true idea of the candidate's muscular strength. To test his courage we should not require him to face fiery dragons like knights of old, because there would be some difficulty in procuring a sufficient store of such monsters. It would be quite sufficient to prescribe that every candidate should be required to ride his own horse, or a horse provided him for the occasion, over a certain number of hurdles of a specified height, and, if he wished to perform more ambitious feats of horsemanship, he should be allowed the opportunity, and given liberal marks if successful. Good rifle shooting should also carry a certain number of marks. In addition, all claims to superior physical excellence should be carefully considered, even if they should not admit of being put to the test in the presence of the examiners. Thus all candidates might be requested to make a statement of the position they had held at school and college in the cricket field or on the river, and to mention any successes they had obtained at football or athletic sports. It can hardly be denied that some such tests would give rather more distinct evidence of physical excellence than any literary examination can ever be hoped to give of intellectual power. Among the other advantages derived would be the encouragement given to intending candidates to qualify for physical marks by the outdoor life of English schools and colleges instead of wasting their health by exclusive attention to their books at a London crammer's. Also the physical test would even, we think, improve the average intellectual capacity of those who pass, because a man who could pass the severe intellectual test without sacrificing his health and strength in the struggle would be an abler man intellectually than one who only succeeded in passing at the expense of his physical vigour. Under the present system it is to be feared that men often gain brilliant success in the examination, but in the determination to succeed in a purely intellectual competition overstrain their mental powers, which may carry them safely through the examination, but nevertheless be permanently impaired for future work. Some of these considerations less imperatively demanded attention in the past. As Professor Wordsworth remarked, the English schoolboy's natural liking for outdoor games secures a large amount of strength and activity in the average Englishman. But with the Native student in India the reverse is the case. The Hindu student has a wonderful capacity for accomplishing successful brain work without the healthful relaxation of active physical exercise. Any scheme that contemplates the admission of Natives into the Civil Service must certainly pay great attention to physical tests, or there will be very great danger of the Service being recruited by learned weaklings who could not possibly command the respect of those whom they will be required to govern. If a certain proportion of Natives of the country are to be chosen to work side by side with Englishmen in the public service, every care should be taken to secure that those selected resemble their English colleagues in courage, strength and activity, and the only way to secure these qualifications is by largely modifying the Civil Service Examination by some such alterations as we have suggested above.

MANUAL LABOUR SCHOOLS.

(Statesman.)

The Liberal, which is one of the most thoughtful of the Native papers, raises a question as to the language in which instruction should be given in the Manual Labour Schools that will probably be the outcome of the cry for technical education. "May we ask," says the writer, "in what language instruction will be imparted to the pupils? We answer at once and without hesitation—through the vernaculars. Let our countrymen be resolved upon this. If we make up our minds to insist upon English there must be a waste of eight or nine years in the schools, after which it will be difficult for any man to adopt a profession in the technical line. Let the vernaculars be encouraged, and a boy may begin his life at once, and his knowledge and proficiency will advance together. No national progress can ever be made with a foreign language as the medium of instruction; for all new ideas proceed from within, and are shaped in the vernacular of the heart. To try to force English upon the mind would be to introduce something that is very unnatural. Consider at the same time what an impetus our scheme will afford to the vernacular literature of the country."

The question must be determined, we believe, by the age at which the instruction in manual labour is to begin. In the great model school at Albarque it does not begin until the boys are fifteen years old, and much must obviously depend upon the determination of this question of age.

We venture to suggest that for the sake of definiteness in our ideas it would be wise to drop the term technical education altogether, substituting for it what we really mean—namely, the establishment of Manual Labour Schools. The American idea—and it has been a successful one—is that up to the age of fifteen years the students should be educated in the ordinary school curriculum of studies, but that at fifteen years the destination of the student should be distinctly recognised as no longer academic, and instead of pursuing what is ordinarily called a University education, the students are now introduced into the workshop, and their studies are subordinated to the idea that they are to become able workmen. Chemistry, natural science, drawing, scientific agriculture, and the modern languages take the place of the study of language, philosophy, mathematics, and what is generally known as high education. Our readers may have observed, perhaps, that our object is to elicit definiteness of conception as to what it is that we propose to do. For ourselves, we take the inarticulate purpose to be the development of such schools as those at Roorkee and Seebpore, into institutions of a somewhat higher order, with an extended curriculum of study. All that is taught at Roorkee and Seebpore will continue to be taught, but a good deal more. What is manifestly wanted just now is a clear and definite outline of the precise thing to be accomplished. The vague and indefinite talk there has been upon the subject must give place to a rational and practical working scheme. The Liberal seems to think that, abandoning the idea of high education altogether, we should take the vernacular schools as they are, and draft the boys, when well versed in the three R's, into workshops, under the superintendence of skilled carpenters, blacksmiths, masons and other artificers. It is pretty clear from this, that the conception our contemporary has formed of the national want is of a less ambitious and pretentious order than Sir Grant Duff and Lord Dufferin have apparently contemplated. The Liberal is probably right, but what we really want are clear and definite ideas of what the new institutions are to be. We published, some days ago, two really valuable letters on the subject, showing what was attempted some years back, in the way of Manual Labour schools, at Patna and in Assam. Both projects collapsed absolutely, showing that either the original conception, or the plans for realising it, were faulty. For ourselves, we are not very sanguine as to what can be done, but we should deem it a public disservice to throw cold water upon any scheme that may be devised. We are strongly impressed with the fact that as yet no one has produced any definite idea of what the new institutions are to be. A most practical suggestion from Mr. Growse ought not to be let slip, although it is preliminary only. Mr. Growse advocates in the strongest terms the confining of the Public Works Department to the construction of strictly Imperial works, leaving the execution of all works of purely local improvement to the local Boards and Municipalities of the country, and the resources of local artificers and contractors. The suggestion will not, we hope, be lost sight of, but kept steadily in mind. On the other hand, we have Sir Lepel Griffin reviewing the subject with great force, in a letter addressed by him to the Pioneer some days ago, on the construction of the new palace that is to be built by the young Maharaja Scindiah at Ujjain, and the Memorial Hospital at Gwalior. Sir Lepel Griffin makes no pretensions probably to art, but his letter is forcible and practical. Our Native contemporaries may legitimately be expected to give the Government substantial assistance in the discussion which this question of technical education has elicited. We are glad to see the Liberal prominently bringing it forward, and our object, as we have said, is to get some definite idea formed as to the nature of the new departure that we are to make.

PRIVILEGE LEAVE.

(Englishman.)

It may be supposed that many loyal officials—Deputy Magistrates in remote sub-divisions, Collectors in little country stations, men of a somewhat prolonged experience of India and its ways—have been celebrating the Jubilee much after the manner of pessimistic old Locksley, feeling as if the fifty happy and prosperous years of the Queen's reign had passed all too quickly, so uneventful since Mutiny days has been the even tenor of the dull mufasal life they have lived. The times have changed, but the change has been gradual. The kutcherry Babus are, perhaps, a trifle less obsequious, but the old tradition of respectful observance towards the hakim has not quite passed away, at all events in official circles, and though the sheristadar may be a leading member of the Brahma Samaj out of kutcherry hours, or even an orator in the debates of some local sabha whose political views are Radical, if not revolutionary, yet in office much of the wonted subservience yet abides, and it is possible to close one's eyes to the change without. Such men must be especially common among those—and they are many in these days of depreciated rupees—who have borne many years of solitary exile, and, from laziness or lack of money, have taken little or no leave. It seems to us a pity that Government does not interest itself more in the holidays of its subordinates. At home the professional or business man generally take his holiday as a matter of course, and is all the better for it. Experience, and the example of his fellows, shows that the expense of a rest and a change of scene and air represents capital not ill-expended. But in India, where we are commonly charged with a perpetual hankering after home comforts, and the brief but delightful dissipation of short leave, nothing is commoner than to meet men who for ten or fifteen years together have taken no other holiday than an occasional wade after snipe, a ride after pig, or a week's tiger shooting.

Some men thrive on such a life, and are none the worse for their voluntary or enforced devotion to the country of their adoption; and, given good health and spirits, perhaps they are more to be envied than more mercurial spirits who are always on the wing, and who, constant spectators of the bustle and change of the outer world, are apt to imagine that the ferment which is stirring in the haven of European life must needs be in operation in the more solid dough of Eastern existence. But there must be many who merely cling on to India because the thought of wife and family and the butcher's book at home renders a change from full pay in India to a scanty furlough allowance impossible. Such as these must have read with a passing thrill of tantalising interest the proposal that officials who have taken little or no leave should be encouraged to jubilate by being allowed to take all their arrears of privilege leave in a lump on full pay; and even, if they will, to add it to their furlough. It may be urged that short privilege leave, if men could or would take it, is a thing by itself—a boon to be grateful for, an opportunity of seeing something of India outside the official's own province, allowed on quite other grounds than the long leave on reduced pay, which is intended for the journey home, and the renewal of the ties with the mother country. But a Jubilee year may well be a year of exceptions, and Government might well, as an act of grace and liberality, allow officials who have not been able, from whatever cause, to take privilege leave for six years or more, to take six months' privilege leave at home, and even to add that amount of privilege leave to any furlough which may be due to them. The boon need not be a very expensive one. Those who have been unwilling, from mere disinclination, to take the boon which was open to them will probably remain disinclined to accept it now, while to those to whom the deterring cause has been the pressure of duty or the absence of funds, the concession would be extremely valuable, and Government would only lose a sum which might have been claimed had the recipients been able to take their privilege leave at a due date. And it may easily be argued that the money paid to the servants of Government during their hard-earned holiday is not money wasted. Many of our officers now-a-days spend their days in the remote mufasal amidst surroundings and under the pressure of duties which are trying to mind and body, and we must all have encountered officials who, not originally wanting in good natural abilities, have been dulled and depressed by a monotonous and harassing existence of constant toil, with few excitements and few recreations. The enforcement of privilege leave is probably impossible, but at least Government might safely try the experiment of encouraging its servants to mark the Jubilee as a pleasant spot in their lives by taking leave, and might give them an opportunity to leave India on full pay. It would be ungenerous to grudge the expense of a boon which could be so easily granted, and which would be productive of so much solid satisfaction.

THE LAY OF THE JUBILEE KNIGHT.

(Statesman.)

The sage sat over his books in the tower;
Sing hey, the clothyard arrow
And the lady sat in her innermost bower;
O the light blue ribbon's narrow;
The porter he stood by the barbian door,
But the drunken old butler did nothing but snore,
As he let the brown ale run all over the floor.
Sing hey, sing ho, the kite and the crow,
The bu bu and the sparrow!
As the fair lady gazed through the sitting room pane
Sing hey, the clothyard arrow!
She saw a gay knight pricking over the plain;
O the bright blue ribbon's narrow!
His pennon was flying so noble to see,
And he rode a swift steed and was armed cap-a-pie;
But she couldn't make out who on earth he could be.
Sing hey, sing ho, the kite and the crow,
The bulbul and the sparrow!
Then the gallant he sounded his horn at the gate,
Sing hey, the clothyard arrow!
Said the sage, "'Tis the taxes. Ah' well, he must wait.'
O the light blue ribbon's narrow!
Quoth the porter, "The washing's come home to the keep,"
But the butler said nothing, for he was asleep;
And the lady was lost in a reverie deep.
Sing hey, sing ho, the kite and the crow,
The bulbul and the sparrow!

Then the lady she leaned from her casement hard by,
Sing hey, the clothyard arrow!
When the stranger perceived her he hollo'd out "Hi!"
O the light blue ribbon's narrow!
"Oh, who might you be?" said the damsel so bright,
"An Earl or a Baron?" He answered, "I might,
But I'm only a brave and adventurous knight,"
Sing hey, sing ho, the kite and the crow,
The bulbul and the sparrow!

Cried the lady, "Oh when'did you win your gold Spurs!"
Sing hey, the clothyard arrow!
And the warrior replied to that question of hers:
O the light blue ribbon's narrow!
"On the Jubilee Day, by the Hoogly's Fair Strand,
When honours were pitchforked all over the land,
I received from the Governor-General's hand,
For reasons no fellow can well understand,
A K.C.S.I., with a ribbon and band,"
Sing hey, sing ho, the kite and the crow,
The bulbul and the sparrow!

THE FUTURE OF INDIA.

(Times of India.)

It is incontrovertible that much remains to be done. How are we to govern this great inheritance bequeathed to us by the courage of heroes, and by the wisdom of statesmen, is the pressing question of the hour. It is now the fashion to sneer at Anglo-Indians, but the Indian Empire is their creation. In its acquirements and administration they have shared the glory and romance of Empire. Everyone knows too well that the administration in this country is full of flaws. But a hundred years is a very short period in the history of an empire. To remedy these flaws is, however, the task of the future. The administrator should remember that a too perfect and rigorous system of land administration may lead to hardship, and should be ever ready to carefully sift the complaint of the peasant. It must always be remembered that on the contentment of the masses depends the stability of that stately fabric—our Indian Empire. During the past fifty years much has been done towards the spread of education, but it must also be borne in mind that under our civilised rule the vast majority of our Indian subjects can neither read nor write. Great improvement has been made in the administration of justice, but much remains to be done to bring justice to the door of every citizen. Higher education has not produced all the good results expected of it, but for the State to abandon it instead of improving it must change a qualified success into probable and possibly disastrous failure. The English have conquered India and have undertaken to govern it on civilised principles, and they cannot now turn a deaf ear on the score of economy to the ever-increasing demands made on a civilised Government. The primary duty of a civilised Government is to gather from the people the means requisite for sound government. But the finances of a great Empire never will be put on a sound footing by specious words. The day will come when Natives will be capable of appreciating the right of using the privileges and responsibility of power, but they are not yet ripe for such a consummation, and those are false friends who would persuade them that they are. The problem of the future is how to steer the ship of State between the Scylla of a too rigid bureaucracy and the Charybdis of a sentimental and spurious liberalism. During the past fifty years the union between Natives and Europeans has grown closer, and it is the duty of every loyal subject of Her Majesty by tact, courtesy, and kindness to promote that union. The greatest service that an Englishman can render his country is to do all that lies in his power to promote the intellectual, moral, and social advancement of the people of India.

BENGAL.

MR. CHARLES H. TAWNEY, M.A., Principal of the Presidency College, Calcutta, will leave for England in April next.

THE HON. D. CRUICKSHANK, chairman of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, is about to leave India, and there is a probability of his continued absence. He has resigned the position of president of the Agri-Horticultural Society of India, which he has held for six years, and the Council has recorded its high sense of his valuable services.

COLONEL W. S. TREVOR, V.C., R.E., Secretary to the Government of India, P.W.D., was entertained at a complimentary dinner at Calcutta by the members of the Department and officers of the Royal Engineers on the occasion of his returning to England. Over eighty officers of the Royal Engineers and gentlemen of the profession were present. The health of the guest was proposed by his successor, General Hancock, and was cordially responded to by every one present, all uniting in wishing their eminent guest a safe and prospering voyage home.

AN extraordinary issue of the Assam Gazette was published on Feb. 12 announcing the death of Mr. Edward Stack. It says:—"The Chief Commissioner has received with deep regret the intelligence of the death, at sea, on Jan. 12, of Mr. Edward Stack, C.S., Director of the Agricultural Department in Assam. Mr. Stack came to this province in October, 1882, and officiated from July to September, 1883, and again from April, 1884, to November, 1886, as Secretary to the Chief Commissioner. His previous services under the Government of the North Western Provinces and of India received the cordial acknowledgments of those Governments, and his career in this province, which has to lament his untimely death, was no less distinguished. In him the Chief Commissioner has lost a most able and conscientious helper, the people of the province a sincere well-wisher, who possessed an exceptional knowledge of their manifold races and languages, their customs and conditions of life, all who knew him a dear and valued friend."

MADRAS.

MR. SCHARTER, Acting Presidency Magistrate, Madras, whose official existence has been endangered through the recommendation of the Finance Committee, has been offered and has accepted the office of second magistrate with a salary of Rs. 800.

THE Government of Madras has not as yet given any reply to the communication from the Madras Harbour Trustees regarding the resignation of Mr. Thorowgood, the Harbour Engineer. The Trustees have, however, taken an important step in resolving to dispense with the services of Mr. Parkes, the designer of the Harbour Works, as Engineer-in-Chief, assigning as a reason, that, when the Board requires any special advice, it will be prepared to pay for it. The Board has also decided to dispense with the services of Mr. Parkes as agent for the purchase of stores and appliances in England, for which he has for some years been receiving a commission; they consider that no agent is necessary for procuring English stores, as the same can be obtained direct from the manufacturers, or in special cases with the assistance of the Madras Government. The last word of the Government on these radical measures will be looked for with considerable interest in the other parts of India.

THE Murree Brewery Company, Limited, who have the malt liquor contracts in the Madras Presidency and Burma for supply to the troops, have just secured a renewal of their Punjab and Beluchistan contracts for ten years. The matter was most cordially supported by the Finance Committee, who proved that the acceptance of Mr. Henry Whympers's proposal to deal with Indian instead of English brewers effected a saving of Rs. 16,00,000 in the ten years. In the hopes of securing a similar concession from the Madras Government, the Company have erected a very fine brewery at Ootacamund at a cost of over 7 lakhs of rupees. The traffic that this Brewery will afford to the Nilgiri Railway Company will be very considerable, and so one local enterprise will materially help forward another.

BOMBAY.

MR. A. A. C. JERVOISE, of the Bombay Civil Service, will retire from the service on the 24th April next.

THE Tramway Company on Jubilee day carried no fewer than 54,635 passengers.

BEFORE Lord Brassey's yacht Sunbeam left Bombay, a party was given on board to purda ladies, of whom there was a goodly number, Hindus, Parsis, and Mahomedans being represented. The guests were received by Lady Brassey at the gangway, and escorted to the fore part of the deck, which had been specially furnished and decorated for the occasion. After an interchange of amenities and the partaking of refreshments, the party broke up about half-past four in the afternoon.

ONE of the criminals released on the Jubilee celebration by order of the Governor of Bombay was Ruttonjee Rustomjee, commonly known as Kaku Wadia, who was convicted three years ago on a charge of criminal breach of trust in respect of certain moneys belonging to the Anglo-Indian Spinning and Weaving Mill, and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. On a representation being addressed to H.E. the Governor in Council by his mother, wife and sister, strongly supported by the recommendation of Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Baronet, Sir Dinshawjee Maneckjee Petit, Kt., and other leading members of the Wadia family, a merciful view of the case was taken by Government, and he was set at liberty.

MR. ERSKINE, C.S.I., Commissioner in Sind, retires from the service on April 1, and he will be succeeded by Mr. C. B. Pritchard, C.S.I., Commissioner of Customs, who has just returned from furlough. The salary of the appointment, which is now Rs. 4,160 per month, will, on the recommendation of the Finance Committee, be reduced to Rs. 3,600.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

THE Hindus of Delhi have at last buried the hatchet, and are now smoking the calumet of peace with their Hindu brethren. Recently the Hindus and Mahomedans formally agreed to trade freely with each other, as before. The Mahomedans had been boycotted ever since the Mohurram, and the tension that prevailed in consequence was becoming a very serious matter.

THE congestion of business in the Punjab Chief Court threatens to become chronic. The judges, however, are working hard to give relief to litigants whose patience in the matter of long waiting is not always equal to the extraordinary demands made upon it. In 1886 four judges disposed of more cases than five succeeded in doing in 1885. They are, however, unable to keep pace with the work, which is constantly and rapidly growing. Bench cases are being set down for hearing in January, 1889, and this is stated to be solely because the number of civil appeals to the Chief Court is largely in excess of what was anticipated when the Punjab Courts Act was passed.

MESSRS. A. G. MAYNE, A. R. H. TUCKER, G. T. C. PLOWDEN, and R. H. GREENSTREET, assistant district superintendents of police in the Punjab, have been selected by the Government of India out of eight volunteers from this province for service in Burma.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

GENERAL CHESNEY goes to Peshin towards the end of March, in time to meet the Commander-in-Chief there.

THE Commander-in-Chief in India on leaving Calcutta goes first to Pindi and Peshawur, and then going down to Beluchistan visits the new cantonment in the Bori Valley, Peshin, the Khojak, and Quetta.

THE following General Order has been issued:—"The Commander-in-Chief announces to the Army with the deepest regret the death of Colonel Sir C. M. MacGregor, K.C.B., C.S.I., C.I.E., formerly Quartermaster-General in India, and more recently Brigadier-General Commanding the Punjab Frontier Force. Sir Charles MacGregor was an officer of rare merit; distinguished in peace for administrative capacity and yet more distinguished in war for his great military instinct, his personal gallantry, untiring energy and enterprising hardihood. His war services include almost every campaign in which the Indian Army has been engaged since he joined its ranks in 1856; and in them he gained distinction first as a regimental officer in the Mutiny and China, then on the Staff in Bhootan and Abyssinia, and lastly in Afghanistan, both as Chief of the Staff and as Brigadier-General. By the untimely death of Sir Charles MacGregor the Indian Army loses one of its most capable and experienced commanders, and Sir Frederick Roberts a valued personal friend."

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL POLE-CAREW, Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, does not proceed on leave home till May. If a Continental war breaks out, his going at all will be as doubtful as that of other officers, who may find all leave and furlough out of India summarily stopped.

It is notified for the information of officers concerned that on no account whatsoever are any alterations or additions to be made in the record of the proceedings of a court-martial after promulgation.

It is notified in the Army Circular that as the Commissaries General, Eastern and Western Circles, have taken the place of the late Commissary General, Bengal, in their respective circles, all matters connected with both Supply and Transport are to be referred by General Officers Commanding Divisions or Districts to the Commissary General, Eastern or Western Circle, who is the head Administrative Officer in his circle as regards both Supply and Transport. The Commissary General, Transport, will on behalf of the Commissary General-in-Chief, make periodical inspections of the Transport, and forward his report of the same, after approval by the Commissary General-in-Chief, to the Commissaries General of Circles, who will advise General Officers Commanding on points requiring their attention with reference to G.O. No. 99 of 1884. Commissaries General of Circles will also make periodical inspections and will communicate direct with General Officers Commanding on any matters which cannot be departmentally dealt with.

THE statement recently made as to a proposed increase in the garrison of Rawal Pindi up to a strength of 10,000 men is, the Pioneer says, misleading. There is no intention whatever of making such an increase, which is not in the least called for, considering over 8,000 men are always in Pindi for six months in the year. The idea was probably due to the recent orders to erect huts for troops at Pindi and Murree. Hitherto the regiments which go to Murree in the hot weather and return to Pindi in the cold have had to live under canvas, the barrack accommodation being insufficient to meet the demands upon it. It is not considered advisable to build expensive barracks which would remain empty for six months in the year, and so huts are to be put up, the men thus being released from the discomforts attaching to tent-life in Murree and "windy" Pindi.

THE intention of moving the Assam Regiment back to India from the Chindwin and neighbourhood will be dependent on the course of events in Wuntho and the Kubo Valley. The 44th Goorkhas on the Upper Chindwin block Wuntho on the west and may have to co-operate with the force engaged against the Tsawbwa. The Kuki raids again in the Kubo Valley will necessitate some action being taken in that quarter. If the Wuntho Tsawbwa's opposition becomes really serious one or two more Native regiments may be sent to Burma when the relief of the ten thousand—the original expeditionary force—takes place.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.*

English settlements in America date from the time of Henry VII, which monarch employed John and Sebastian Cabot to follow in the wake of Columbus, whose discoveries had aroused an extraordinary degree of enthusiasm in the Old World. But the religious wars of the sixteenth century delayed for upwards of two centuries the occupation of North America, and it was not till the genius of a Raleigh dawned upon Great Britain that Transatlantic adventure began to touch a chord of sympathy in the national bosom. At first the efforts at colonisation were confined to private individuals, or at least to combinations of persons bound together by common interests and similar aspirations; but ere long two great companies were formed, known as the London Company and the Western Company; and despite the most appalling difficulties, and the most disheartening failures, these energetic corporations succeeded in planting the flag of England firmly on the shores of the New World—a result due in large measure to the indomitable energy and indefatigable zeal of one solitary individual, Captain Smith, the pioneer of civilisation in the wilds of the prairies.

"Virtual independence of the mother-country was the aim of the first colonists." Such is the dictum of Mr. Greg, and in fairness it must be added that the subsequent course of events tends in large measure to corroborate this somewhat startling assumption, but why should this have been the case? Our author holds the view that the early settlers were Puritans, inspired with the strictest notions and imbued with the most narrow-minded prejudices, men who could see in the land of their ancestors nought but what they loathed—a monarchical Constitution, which appeared in their eyes as an emblem of oppression and wrong; a church which they hated with an inveterate hatred, of which none but such religious enthusiasts could be capable. This may be true, though it savours somewhat of this very self-same narrow-mindedness to impute such want of liberality to persuasions which chance to be an object of dislike and aversion; but even with such a fair field of imputation open to the imagination, does this account for the assumption which underlies the argument? So thoughtful and reflective a writer must surely be aware that ships left Plymouth much about the same time, filled by the self-same stamp of men, and founded the British Empire in the East? Why did not bigotry, intolerance, and religious hate blossom and bear fruit in the sunny East alike as in the colder plains of the New World? Yet the most intolerant intolerance cannot point to a single instance where hatred to the mother-country was the main-spring of action amidst the settlers in the land of the Great Mogul. No! the reasons must be sought elsewhere; what they may be remains in our opinion yet to be discovered.

Apart, however, from this flaw in the argument, it cannot be questioned that Mr. Greg has made good his case that, to a large extent, feelings of animosity against the land of their birth did animate and influence the actions of the early settlers; and the seed of discord thus sown brought forth fruit in ample abundance, resulting as is known to every schoolboy in the War of American Independence towards the close of the eighteenth century. In this section of his history our author throws a completely new light upon the subject, and shows, as many will think conclusively, that the popular notion is erroneous in so far as the loss of the American Colonies was not due to the grasping avarice and criminal stupidity of the British Cabinet. Far otherwise, the colonists appear to have been determined to secede, and it was only after concession upon concession, almost to the point of weakness upon the part of the English Government, had failed to arouse a sentiment of gratitude, or a feeling of respect, that recourse was had to the arbitrament of war.

Nor should the lesson of national perfidy on the part of France be forgotten, for in these days, when politicians are wont to fall down and worship the "red-cap" of gallic Republicanism, it should not be overlooked that America was lost to England by the money and men which Louis XVI. supplied to the struggling and sorely-pressed colonists, who except for this assistance, supplied in violation of all the principles of International Law, would have been forced to submit to the will of the conqueror and bear the yoke of Imperial subjugation.

Space precludes any examination of the careers of General Washington, Franklin, and others of note in the War of Independence, who are painted in colours far different from the picture so generally familiar to the English reader.

Nor can we do more than glance at the chapters which treat of the War of Secession between the Northern and Southern States. Mr. Greg warmly espouses the cause of the latter, inspired to a large extent by the consideration that as gentlemen, and the descendants of gentlemen, they are entitled to a sympathy withheld from their bluff, rude, and unlovable brethren in the North. Such a feeling is doubtless more or less natural; and it may even be conceded that the abolition of slavery meant ruin to thousands of families, and desolation to countless homes, so that the South may almost be said to have fought for national existence. Making every allowance for all these circumstances, still Mr. Greg seems to have overlooked the important consideration that the North were fighting for unity of empire. They discerned that with peoples as with persons, "a house divided against itself cannot stand." They had the perception to realise that two Americas could not possess the influence or carry the weight of one America, and they were alive to the fact that the same reasons which caused the separation would keep the breach unhealed, so they fought with a fury and zeal known only to combatants in civil war, and they were right. Lasting peace could only have been secured by hard fighting; the edifice of national greatness was built up with the bodies of her sons slain to unite a people, and sprinkled with the blood of those who had died that their descendants might live prosperous and great. The lesson is important, and should occasion reflection at a time when disunion paralyses the hand of power in this our own day, and license haunts itself in the guise of liberty.

Mr. Percy Greg has written a graphic, lucid, and most valuable account of the United States. There is not a line but what is readable and interesting, and if the partisan take the place of the historian it is easy to make allowances and disconnect views which are coloured with personal predilections and individual sentiments.

THE RISE OF THE BRITISH POWER IN THE EAST.*

Often as has been told the tale of the rise of the British Forces in the East, the story will bear repeating; for it shows the sons of England in an unrivalled light, as founders of a mighty Empire alike the envy and the admiration of the civilised world. It is fitting, too, that Elphinstone's history of India should be brought down to a more modern date. The thanks of the public are therefore due to Sir Edward Colebrooke for editing the MS. which has been placed in his hands. It may, perhaps, savour of heresy to assert that the volume under review is rather valuable than interesting. As a concise account of the struggles in India between the French and English nations, resulting in the eventual supremacy of the latter, it doubtless fulfils the object with which it was written. It is, withal, accurate and trustworthy; but there is an absence of graphic brilliancy such as is to be found in every line of "Macaulay's Essays," which, as a result, are read by thousands in place of tens. Not that the substance is equal to the style, for the warning to receive statements cum grano salis is more than usually necessary in the case of the great essayist, but the language—that is beyond compare! The history of India has yet to be written. Mill is heavy, turgid, and biased. Marshman is a mere outline, a remark which also applies to Meadows Taylor. Murray is little more than a sketch. Elphinstone is heavy, cumbersome, and sleepy. One man and one alone in our judgment is competent for the task—Colonel Malleison—by far the most brilliant writer connected with the East; and, since the death of Sir John Kaye, the only author who can lend an air of reality to the events of the stirring East.

Thus much as regards Sir Edward Colebrooke's volume, judged from the standpoint of attractiveness and interest. As a work of reference it should find a niche in every library. We know—and we speak with considerable experience—of no single summary which is more concise, clear, or complete. In a word, what Elphinstone's well-known History has been for half-a-century in connection with the earlier events of the East, that his present posthumous publication is as regards later occurrences in the dominions which own the sway of the Empress of India. It is a pity the edition did not continue the narrative to the year of grace 1886, and thus make a complete story; but the task would have been laborious, and the public must rest content with a very useful addition to the histories of India.

MONEY AND LABOUR.†

Mr. Tidman is a staunch bimetalist, and would resort to legislation to remedy the present depreciation of silver. On the homœopathic principle, that, as the evil is attributable to legislation, in a like manner it should be cured, he is possibly right. We have never seen why silver should be considered, by political economists, common or unclean. Addressed, as the Paper was, primarily, to working men of the wage-earning classes, it contains not a few practical illustrations easy to be understood of the people who, after all, are more deeply interested in it than the use of politico-economical jargon in order to obscure the topic has suffered them to perceive.

To India, where the satisfactory solution of the question is of an overwhelming importance, the limits of time assigned to a Paper of this character permitted Mr. Tidman to devote but few words; but these are to the point, and are characterised by sound common sense. It seems perfectly inconceivable that, while five-sixths of our commerce is carried on with silver-using countries, and when "a common measure of value is as necessary between London and Calcutta as between London and Glasgow," it could have been wise to place, or can be prudent to retain, an artificial restriction on the free interchangeability of the two precious metals. The Paper is written sensibly, and in a popular style, and may be commended as being singularly free from technicalities, as abounding in illustration, and as throwing, with the aid of the valuable tables which are annexed to it, not a little of the light of common sense on a very important subject.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.

"What will they do with it?" is a continuation of former articles treating of the position and prospects of women in the East; there are many thoughtful suggestions which merit and will doubtless receive due consideration. Mr. St. John gives an elaborate analysis of a recent judgment of the High Court of British Burma, tending to show that the view taken as to divorce in that country is not sound. "Facts and Words" is full of sound advice, while "Folklore in Western India" is eminently readable; but the most striking essay is that entitled "Social Life in India," which draws attention to the fact which is generally lost sight of that caste exists in all but name in society at large in every country, only it is called "custom." The article might with advantage be read by everyone about to take up an appointment in India where he will be in a position of responsibility, and come in contact with his swarthy brethren in the East.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"English Dictionary." By James A. H. Murray. Part III. (Clarendon Press, Oxford.)

COLONEL LAURIE has requested us to correct an error which, through a misprint, appears in his "Distinguished Anglo-Indians." At page 153, line 7 from beginning of sketch, the date of arrival of Sir John Kaye is given as 1783, which would make our Indian historian 110 at his decease—a truly patriarchal age, which no Anglo-Indian has ever yet reached. The correct date of arrival of the literary cadet of Bengal Artillery in the renowned Indian land is 1833.

A VAGRANT tribe of Beluchis or Mekranis has been giving much trouble to the authorities in the Punjab. Now, however, they themselves have got into trouble in the Multan district; and some four or five of their leading men, and two or three of their women, are awaiting trial under various sections in the Penal Code. The bulk of the gang have moved off in the direction of Jhang.

SIMLA BANK CORPORATION (LD).—The following history of the above bank, which closed its doors on the 1st instant, will be interesting to many of our readers:—By a resolution passed at a meeting of residents of Simla on Oct. 12, 1844, the Hon. J. C. Erskine presiding, it was determined to establish a bank, to be called the Simla Bank, with a capital of five lakhs of rupees. Dr. W. E. Carte, a retired medical officer of the East India Company's service, was elected first secretary, but he resigned in the April following, being succeeded by Mr. Arnold H. Matthews, during whose secretaryship the capital of the concern was increased, first to eight lakhs in 1845, then to twelve lakhs in 1847, and ultimately to twenty-two lakhs. The bank had agencies at Umballa, Murree, and Calcutta, and an English agency in London. In July, 1853, Mr. Charde was appointed secretary in succession to Mr. Matthews, and on his appointment the London agency severed its connection with the parent institution—being converted into an "unlimited" concern, styled the London and Eastern Bank, with a very large capital. The offshoot lived but a few years, collapsing with enormous loss to its shareholders; its failure causing great excitement at the time. This severance reduced the Simla Bank almost to a local institution, and its capital fell to seven lakhs. Mr. Fleming, who had followed Mr. Charde as secretary, died in 1851, when Mr. Peterson (then a trustee of the bank) was elected to fill the vacancy. Under Mr. Peterson the concern seemed for a time to flourish, its capital being raised again in 1864 to ten lakhs, and in 1865 to thirteen lakhs. On the resignation by Mr. Peterson of the secretaryship in 1884, and the appointment of Mr. A. Chisholm, previously the bank's agent at Umballa, to succeed him, the affairs of the bank were found to be in a bad way; and it was considered necessary in December, 1885, at a meeting of shareholders, to pass a resolution reducing the capital from Rs. 13,00,000 to Rs. 8,45,000, by altering the value of the shares from Rs. 500 to Rs. 325. The Rs. 4,55,000 thus provided at the expense of the shareholders was devoted to providing for the losses and bad debts incurred mainly during the incumbency of Mr. Peterson. This reduction in the value of the shares weakened confidence in the bank, and, added to the injury done by certain disclosures recently made during a suit brought against the management by an employé whose services had been dispensed with, caused a run on the concern which was found difficult to cope with, and which at last brought about the end.—Pioneer.

IN MEMORIAM.

SIR WILLIAM ANDREW, C.I.E.

ALTHOUGH his Indian experience was limited to the few years during which he served in that country as a Post-office official, the name of Sir William Andrew has been rightly included by Colonel Laurie in his list of "Distinguished Anglo-Indians." For from the date of his return from India to almost that of his death, he never ceased to interest himself in the great question of how to hold and consolidate English supremacy in the East. He was there justly called the "Apostle of Railways," for he held the opinion that in the extension of railways in connection with and throughout her magnificent Empire of India lay England's best means of strengthening herself there, and of being able to bid defiance to any other Power who would dare to dispute her sovereignty. That was with regard to any threat from outside. Within the boundaries of British India Sir William Andrew saw the brightest prospects for the development of the resources of India by the extension of railways. "In 1846," said the Times, in a leading article, "before the first railway sleeper had been laid or the first sod turned, Sir William Andrew was bold in prophesying the vast results that would follow when the plans in contemplation had been carried out. In 1848, before a single mile of railway had been opened, the total value of the external trade of India was a little more than twenty-five millions sterling. In 1883 India had more than ten thousand miles of railway opened and in use, and the external trade of the country is put down for that year at £147,837,920; or, in round numbers, at six times the amount at which it stood before the stimulus of railways had begun to be felt." This alone is an eulogy, but the object of it was not a man to be content with mere prophesyings or generalisations. He devoted his energies to specific details and to clearly-defined schemes of construction. He used his pen with energy and determination, in the hope of impressing upon English statesmen responsible for the stability of English Empire in the East the necessity of promoting railway and telegraphic communication with India. A summary of the works which he published to this end indicates the indomitable perseverance with which he followed up the views he had formed regarding the necessity of bringing public opinion at home to take into its consideration the importance of the matters he advocated. Amongst such efforts of the pen may be cited "Indian Railways, by an old Indian Postmaster" (1846), "The Scinde Railway in relation to the Euphrates Valley and other Routes to India," "Memoir on the Euphrates Valley Route to India," "London to Lahore or the Euphrates, Scinde, and Punjab Railways" (1856-57), "The Indus and its Provinces: their Political and Commercial Importance" (1858), "Letters to Secretaries of State for Foreign Affairs and India on the Euphrates Valley Railway" (1870), "Lecture delivered at the Royal United Service Institution on the Euphrates Route to India in connection with the Central Asian Question" (1873), "The strategic and commercial evils of a break of gauge in India" (1874), "India and her Neighbours" (1878), "The Bolan and Khyber Railways" and "Our Scientific Frontier" (1880), "Indian Railways as connected with the British Empire in the East" (1884), "The Advance of Russia," &c., &c. These are only a few of the papers which he penned on the subject ever present to his mind—the necessity of improved communication between England and her Eastern Empire. "England," he wrote, "is not only a great Eastern Power, but she possesses more Mahomedan subjects than the Sultan and the Shah together; the standing armies of the Feudatory Princes of India number over 300,000 men, with more than 5,000 guns, and it is urgent to have improved and additional means of communication between England and India." The Euphrates Valley route, which was his pet scheme, was no wild chimerical idea as some opponents tried to make out. So long ago as 1858 Field-Marshal Baron Kuhn von Kuhnfeld, Austrian War Minister, gave it as his opinion that "Whatever the commercial value of the Suez Canal to Central Europe, there is no doubt that it is secondary in importance to the Euphrates Railway, which affords the only means of stemming the Russian advances in Central Asia, and which directly covers the Suez Canal." And at the National Club in June, 1882, the late Sir Bartle Frere said, "At Sir William Andrew's instance he (Sir Bartle Frere) had been invited to communicate his views on the subject of the Euphrates route to Mr. Gladstone—then Prime Minister—and to the late Lord Clarendon as long ago as 1856, and that from that day Sir William never ceased by tongue and pen to urge the advantages of the Euphrates Valley line as an alternative to that by the Red Sea; and had not other influences and interests stood in the way Lord Palmerston would long ago have taken up the scheme as one of national importance when it had the active support of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe and H.E. Musurus Pacha. Any day," continued Sir Bartle, "might bring us news of the stoppage of the Suez Canal route, and the English commercial world would then be rudely awakened to the value of an alternative line of communication with India."

In the Press of France, America, Germany, India, and even in that of Russia, the views of the "Lesseps of England" as he was not inaptly called, met with attention and approval. And it cannot be urged against the Press of England that it treated those views with neglect. The Times of October 13th, 1879, contained the following testimony to the foresight which long before had led to the advocacy of constructing strategic lines of railway to the Bolan Pass and the Khyber:—

It is now upwards of a quarter of a century since the Chairman of the Scinde Railway commenced to broach the idea of connecting the Khyber and the Bolan Passes with the railway system of India. For more than a quarter of a century he has unsparingly advocated these views, not only in weighty official communications to the Indian Government, in repeated letters in our columns, but in books replete with valuable information concerning the trade and history of India. Had the views so persistently advocated by Mr. Andrew, and so repeatedly brought forward by us, been adopted at the commencement of the struggle last October, as we then ventured to insist upon, vast sums would have been spared in the hire of transport, and we should have been spared the ignominy of feeling that a British army, nominally on active service, has occupied five weeks in covering less than seventy miles.

So far the Press of his own country tried to do him justice in supporting his views regarding the necessity of improved telegraphic and railway communication with India. Regarding the former he commenced, and successfully too, to agitate in 1856; regarding the latter it was his life's labour from ten years previously, and he never ceased to the day of his death to urge the advantage of the Euphrates Valley line as an alternative to that of the Red Sea. But he fought against officialism, and the battle was to the strong. He may be said, however, to have died in harness, for his Scottish blood would not allow him to give in in a contest in which he knew he had the right upon his side. It is too late now, perhaps, to attempt the carrying out of the grand project he advocated. England is sitting with folded hands waiting the course of events, while Russia is moving Eastward with giant stride.

In any other country but his own Sir William Andrew would long ago have received the highest honours from the State. As it was he was only lately gazetted to a knighthood and the Order of the Indian Empire. He deserved more, for besides his own pet scheme he interested himself in all measures which promised to be of benefit to India or her peoples. His chivalrous and genial nature won to him many friends; he was a liberal patron of the arts, given to hospitality, and with a hand open as the day to melting charity. His life, prolonged beyond the common span allotted by the Psalmist to human existence, was an honourable record of useful work, intellectual labour's and high aims, and when the Shadow which waits for all men came:

"Death laid his hand
Upon his heart, gently not smiting it,
But as a harper lays his open palm

[COMMUNICATED.]

THE lecture on the "Capital of India," lately delivered by Sir George Campbell, touched upon a very important question which is rapidly forcing itself into notice. It is, perhaps, no disparagement to the talented Essayist, or the distinguished file of Anglo-Indians who joined in the discussion which the paper was intended to excite, to assert that the question upon which they one and all concentrated their energies seemed to baffle all attempts at solution. Nor should this circumstance be cause for astonishment. First of all, there is an evident divergence of opinion as to the meaning of the term "capital." Some of the speakers seemed to hold to the opinion that commerce should govern the choice of localities; in other words, they incline to the view that the largest emporium of trade in the East should form the "Metropolis" of the Empire; but this is only shuffling the cards and leaving the pack otherwise unchanged, for, apart from the fickleness of trade, which is constant in nothing but change, what, it may be inquired, is the practical meaning of the word "Metropolis" of the Empire? No two authorities are agreed upon the point, and until this difficulty be removed from the path it is hopeless to attempt a remedy. In our judgment, the answer must be given in the words of Mr. Mackenzie, the Home Secretary to the Government of India, who describes the Capital of India as "the local habitation for the Imperial bureau." This seems to have been the sense in which Sir George Campbell interpreted the somewhat elastic phrase, and it is in this restricted interpretation that we propose to consider the subject.

So far as the meeting was concerned the choice seemed to lay between Calcutta, Simla, and a spot, possibly Nassick, in the centre of the peninsula. To our judgment Simla and Nassick do not adequately fulfil the requirements of the case. The former is an out-of-the-way place, which is not only difficult of access, and badly supplied with water, but is so removed from all centres of life that the Supreme Government could never hope to be in touch with Native sentiment and feeling. As regards the latter city these defects do not exist—at any rate, to any appreciable extent; but, in common with its rival in the Hills, it possesses the insuperable drawback that it is "politically," and in a measure "strategically," unsuited for the headquarters of the Queen's Viceroy. It would be difficult more aptly to illustrate this argument than by supposing for a moment that during the terrible crisis of 1857–8 Lord Canning and his advisers had been shut up in either of the towns under consideration, their very lives even endangered at the hands of the insurgents, surrounded, cut off from intercourse, if not with the country itself, at any rate with the authorities in England, far removed from all external assistance. If this had been the position of affairs during that ever memorable struggle what would have been the end thereof?

Therefore we argue that over and above all things the seat of Government must always be so located that communication with Europe and other parts of the world, whether by telegraph or steam, never can be interrupted even for an hour—sixty minutes may mean the loss of an Empire. An isolated capital may be followed by the loss of India in the next Mutiny, when Russia to a certainty will play openly the rôle of an intriguing power, while she has hitherto acted sub silentio.

If to this all-important consideration be added the fact that at least in name and theory, if not in fact, the "City of Palaces" is the historic capital of the East, and does fulfil at least this one superlative consideration, while it is free from attack by an enemy's cruisers, has any good reason been made out for a change which would be costly, which might be unpopular, and which assuredly would leave in the ocean of publicity a broad wake of angry feelings and embittered disputes? Quæta non mōvere is for once in the history of India the wisest and safest policy.

A LITTLE story comes to us from afar, which shows how deftly modern science and modern appliances lend themselves to carry on rites and customs celebrated on the Ganges a thousand years ago. A sepoy died a long way from his home and country, and his caste fellows duly cremated him, and having done this, they went to the telegraph office and wired as follows to his parents :—"Binda Persad died last night. Bones by post." The message, though a little abrupt, is quite intelligible.

HIGH FALUTIN.—Mr. Justice West of Bombay, like Mr. Cotton of Bengal, sheds light on all that he touches. Until he arose in the Valhalla of the Bombay University, the burning subject of technical education had been, he declared, "somewhat tamely handled." So he addressed himself to it with that nimbleness and dexterity of speech for which he is famous. We are accustomed to gushing talk in high places; but it has seldom been our fate to come across so pretty a specimen of claptrap as the following:—"It is through technical education that the riches of the world are brought to our feet, that the weak are made strong and the poor rich, and that the fainting soul receives the lightning-like communications that gives it peace." Mr. West is not, so far as we are aware, a member of the Salvation Army; but the great Booth himself has seldom achieved a higher flight.—Civil and Military Gazette.

THE appointment of Mr. J. B. Lyall to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab is, from one point of view, peculiarly appropriate. Mr. Lyall is an admitted authority on the Land Revenue system of the Province, and he may be able to use his intimate knowledge of its working to remedy the state of things that has grown up under his predecessor. It is no secret that owing to the arrears into which the Punjab Government has allowed the revision of its Land Revenue settlement to fall, it has sacrificed about 16 lakhs of revenue; and this, it is clear, is the explanation, and a very sufficient one, of the apparent severity of the Finance Committee. The Committee have too much reason for declining to assign an increased revenue to the Province, when these are the results of its management. Had the missing lakhs been forthcoming, the due proportion of them would have gone during the next five years to increase the provincial resources. It is unlucky for the Punjab Government that the Imperial Revenue are just at this moment feeling the pinch of the depreciated rupee; but there is no one really to blame in the readjustment but itself. The "Pauper Province" as it is now called—for the title "Model" has long been dropped outside the precincts of the Secretariat—will have to set its house in order fiscally; and if the coming Lieutenant-Governor can give the Administration an impulse that way, it will be the best justification of his choice.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE ON INDIA.

At the Town Hall, Stratford, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., addressed a large meeting held under the auspices of the North-West Ham Conservative Association, Mr. Forrest Fulton, M.P., presiding. Sir Richard Temple said that India offered to the people of England the second greatest market in the world. China occupied the premier position in this matter, and if he were asked why India only came second he would point out that that country had a population of 250,000,000 as against 300,000,000 in China. There were two grand trunk systems of railway, each of which would tend to extend British influence in China, and when by means of railways the Chinese were connected with the Indian market there would be opened out a boundless vista of progress for British enterprise. India was fifteen times larger than Great Britain, and its population was increasing by about a million every year. Its cultivation was also spreading and its agriculture expanding. Wages and the price of commodities had doubled within a generation. Houses and implements had improved during the last twenty years, and the country drove a great foreign trade, and had a large accumulated capital. They exported grain for food in millions of tons, and it was noteworthy that if famine came on them by their stocks of grain, they were able to sustain life for several weeks or even months before the pinch came. Sir Richard Temple then quoted figures, showing the export and import trades of England and India. Of the total exports of India, England imported one-tenth, and of our total exports India imported one-fifth. Clearly, therefore, India was one of our best customers in the world. But still there were articles which could be sent to the East, and it was to impress this fact on the British working-man that he was giving that address. We had a great country and a grand market, of which nothing could deprive us. India was a better customer than France or Germany, a better customer than the United States, better even than the Colonies, and he was happy to say that the next best customer after India was Australia. We might lose all the foreign markets, the Continent of Europe might close its ports to our goods, the United States might cripple our trade by import duties and prohibitory tariffs, and the Colonies might do the same, but with all this we should have the grandest customer which such a vast population afforded. So long as we had command of the sea, so long as Britannia ruled the waves, the 40 millions of the most skilful people on the earth had 250 millions who would take their produce and furnish a market. As an industrial people we must maintain our foreign markets. India now imported £65,000,000 sterling, and of this she took £50,000,000 from us, £3,000,000 from Europe, and the remaining £12,000,000 from British Colonies and British possessions. We had thus the greater part of her trade, and by our skill, energy, and enterprise we ought to strive to keep it. It was easily conceivable that she would take more from us than she did. £65,000,000 meant only 5s. per head of the population. England imported £9 per head, France £5 per head, and the United States £3 per head, and when he said that the United Kingdom imported 36 times more than the people of India they could see what an opening there was for the British. He must remind them that the greater part of the great traffic in which we had so great an interest went through the Suez Canal, and the Canal was, of course, most valuable to us; but still he did not admit that it was indispensable. We might lose its benefit, but only by a defeat in a naval engagement in the Mediterranean. That was an almost impossible supposition. If it should be stopped up we still had the old route open by the Cape. Still we needed to keep our maritime supremacy; we must have a Navy to protect our coasts, our colonies, and our commerce, and he would earnestly warn them that if we were beaten at sea, nothing but ruin—black, blank ruin—stared the working men of England in the face. The usual votes of thanks concluded the proceedings.

ORDERS have been given for a survey to be made to ascertain the best route for a railway line across the Khowa Amran range, the object in view being a prolongation of the Quetta railway in that direction.

NOTWITHSTANDING the efforts which have been made by the officers of the Native regiments to induce their men to enlist in the police force in Burma, less than 100 men have enrolled themselves. It seems that the men dislike the country, and, apart from this, consider the proposed term of enlistment too long.

*The foregoing twelve sketches only appeared in the Original Edition.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished Anglo Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire.
The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London Journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

THE
AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette
has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges, and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.In England—per annum £1 0 0 } In advance,

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . .
there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 4th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 2nd March; and from Calcutta to the 1st March.

SEVERAL petty encounters with dacoits in Upper Burma are reported. Owing to the continued activity of the dacoits the cavalry regiments at present in Upper Burma will be detained there for another season.

THE Wuntho Tswabwa has had an interview with a British official, but has refused to come to reasonable terms.

As two of the police battalions from Burma are far from being complete, it has been decided to send the 10th and 23rd Bengal Infantry to Upper Burma.

It has been decided to abandon the Kyan-Nhyat-Saga-doung route to the Burma Ruby Mines, a much easier route having been found more to the south from Kyetpyin.

It is said that, on Mr. Crosthwaite's assumption of the office of Chief Commissioner of Burma, the pay of the appointment will be increased.

A GREAT fire has occurred at Allanmyo, destroying half the town and completely wiping out the adjoining village of Yuatong. Altogether 500 houses were destroyed. The sufferings of the homeless people were increased by the riotous conduct of drunken soldiers. Two Europeans and several Burmese were wounded.

No authentic intelligence has been received as yet regarding the recent fight that took place, in the direction of Thul, between the Waziris on the one side and the Terais and Ghilzais on the other.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS arrived in Bombay on Sunday, having come to meet Lady Roberts, who was a passenger in the Cathay. His Excellency and Lady Roberts left for Umballa on Tuesday evening.

MR. JOSHUA KING, late Collector of Satara, has offered Rs. 10,000 to the Victoria Technical Institute for the sons of bond fide handicraftsmen belonging to Ahmedabad, Kaira, Ahmednuggur, and Satara.

A CONSPIRACY to oust the present Government of Nepal has caused some excitement at Khatmandu.

THE Albert Hall and Museum at Jeypore, the foundation-stone of which was laid by the Prince of Wales in 1876, has been opened by Sir Edward Bradford.

THE number of witnesses to be examined in Calcutta before the members of the Public Service Commission will probably not exceed fifty, as the Branch Committee have already taken the evidence of some forty witnesses.

THE Budget this year, requiring no fresh taxation, will take the form of a Minute by Sir Auckland Colvin, and will probably be issued on the 25th of March.

It has been arranged that Sir Alfred Lyall will continue in the Lieutenant-Governorship of the North-West Provinces until the 15th of November next, when Sir Auckland Colvin will relieve him.

COLONEL SIR W. G. DAVIES has arrived at Calcutta to take part in the committee work on the Punjab Land Bills.

April 1st is now fixed as the date on which the Legislative Council will meet at Delhi to dispose finally of those bills.

MR. J. W. CUNNINGHAM, who has been officiating as Foreign Secretary, goes on short leave to England after Mr. Durand has rejoined at Simla.

THE Senate of the Punjab University has conferred the degree of Doctor of Oriental Learning on Sir Charles Aitchison, honoris causa.

COLONEL LINDSAY, R.E., who is going home on furlough, has been employed for many years in connection with Indian railways. The Northern Bengal and the Bolan State Railways were constructed under his supervision.

THE death is announced of Mr. J. C. Douglas, of the Telegraph Department, who took great interest in bee culture in India.

THE value of the trade by land of British India with foreign countries for the first seven months of the current financial year, as compared with the corresponding period of last year, shows an increase of Rs. 45,83,799.

THE Bombay Port Trustees have secured the contract for landing the plant and materials for the Indian Midland Railway. It is expected that the contract will increase the revenue at the Prince's Dock by Rs. 75,000.

A SETTLEMENT of the question of Simla allowances is for the present postponed. The allowances will be drawn this season on the same scale as hitherto.

THE quantity of wheat exported from the Central Provinces from the 1st of October last to the 14th of February was 8,43,348 bags of 2½ maunds each, as compared with 12,13,059 bags exported in the corresponding period of last year.

THE health of H.H. the Prince of Arcot is causing the gravest anxiety to his family and friends. He is, it appears, suffering from paralysis.

It has been ruled that members of the North-West Legislative Council take rank with Members of the Bengal Council.

At present the office of Cantonment Magistrate can be held for an unlimited period. It is understood, however, that the Military authorities contemplate the introduction of a change, by which the tenure of this office will be limited to five or seven years.

As the financial year draws to a close it is interesting to note that the salt revenue is in a satisfactory state. Unless the two months, January and February, are unusually bad the year will be the best that has been known since 1882-83. The returns at the end of January were as follows (in thousands):—Quantity, 26,950 maunds; duty, Rs. 52,064. Last year at the same time the duty only amounted to Rs. 49,422.

It would seem that Aden is likely to become the seat of an important salt industry. An Italian firm has lately been at work on the manufacture of fine salt there, and the first shipment was recently despatched to Calcutta. The greatest care is taken in the manufacture of the salt, the water being passed through several pans where it deposits all its impurities before the crystallisation takes place. The result is the production of a salt of which 96.40 parts in 100 are pure chloride of sodium. It is estimated that when the works are in full operation 40,000 tons of salt a year can be manufactured, a fact of great importance to the trade of Aden, as vessels going to that port with coal, instead of filling up with ballast can take a cargo of salt to Indian ports, where they could obtain a paying cargo for their homeward voyage.

THE authorities in Burma contemplate constructing a narrow-gauge tramway on the Ruby Mines Road. For this purpose the Chief Commissioner, understanding that the Government of India possesses twenty miles of two and a half-foot rails, with gear and rolling stock fit for immediate erection, has inquired whether this plant can be allotted for use on the plain section of the route from the Irrawaddy River to the Ruby Mines country.

Notes of the Week.

A TELEGRAM from Calcutta, dated yesterday, states that the two rail heads from Sibi and Quetta of the Sind-Pishin Railway met, and were joined at midnight of the 14th inst.

NEWS from Afghanistan and Nepal continues to be of plots and counterplots. It is reported from the former that the people in various parts are disturbed and excited (were they ever anything else?), and that a revolt is expected. A revolt, however, is always to be expected in Afghanistan, but it is rather strange to learn in a London newspaper that disturbing news from Afghanistan last week affected the Stock Exchange, and caused a fall in certain Securities. That anybody should invest in anything that can be touched by a rumour from Cabul is indeed marvellous.

THAT there should be alarm concerning plots in Nepal is likely enough so long as any of the relations of the late Jung Bahadur are alive and at large. The Durbar of Nepal has possibly not forgotten how that eminent nobleman raised himself to power by his skill as a marksman in shooting down his uncles. Some of his family may be inclined to repeat the experiment, and therefore it is not surprising that several arrests and deportations should have been made.

If it be true, as reported by telegraph, that in the attack made on the 9th inst. on Boshway's camp by Lieutenant Golightly the Burman police "behaved admirably," there is cause for congratulation, for the general opinion held hitherto in India has been that the Burmans were utterly useless as policemen, and that to keep Upper Burma quiet a large force of Punjabis would have to be enrolled—a difficult thing to do, as the Natives of the Punjab have no liking for service far away from their own province.

NOTWITHSTANDING all that has been done in the way of sanitation for Calcutta it appears to be still the haunt and home of cholera. According to a report just issued by the Calcutta Health Society there have been during the past six years 24,000 deaths from this disease alone in the city and suburbs. The report states that this fact is directly traceable to the filthy condition of certain plague spots, to defects in the drainage system, to the want of proper control over the milk supply, and to the deficiency of the water supply. This is an extraordinary condition for the capital of India to be in, considering the enormous sums which have been spent by the municipality in the endeavour to make it healthy.

LORD DUFFERIN has acted wisely in leaving a city whose sanitary condition is in, so disgraceful a state, but by all accounts the condition of Simla, to which he is wending his steps, is not much better. It is said that the drainage there is most defective, and that the water supply is also deficient. But the Simla Municipality has managed to spend a good number of lakhs of rupees, and is in debt for the supposed improvements made for the benefit of the fortunate people who flock thither to escape the dangers of Calcutta. If there was a little less talk and a little more work in Indian Municipalities there would be fewer complaints of the unsanitary state of so many Indian stations.

RAWUL-PINDI is noted for being one of the healthiest of Indian cantonments, but there are grumblers there also, as a "special" correspondent, writing to one of the home military papers, complains of the incessant drilling which has been going on during the tenure of General Martin Dillon's command. We wonder what the "special" would have written had he served in the Punjab under Sir Sidney Cotton? Besides, the camp at Rawul-Pindi has always been considered the best military training school which our Army in India has.

STRANGE intelligence finds its way sometimes from London to India. Here is a specimen. A correspondent informs the Calcutta Englishman that there is good reason to believe that the Jubilee Institute scheme has been abandoned at the desire of Her Majesty, owing to its not having met with the support anticipated. It is rather premature to give such a hint—which in India, by the way, will rather serve to damp the subscription ardour which, according to the latest accounts, was at white heat. It is to be hoped that the Countess of Dufferin's fund will not suffer on account of the idle rumours of correspondents, whose irresponsible chatter is hardly worth the cost of telegraphing, even at Press rates.

THE funeral of Sir Patrick William Andrew, C.I.E., took place at noon on Wednesday, the 16th inst., his remains being interred in Kensal-green Cemetery. A correspondent writes:—"The graves of the famous cemetery were almost covered with snow; but a bright sun shone over the unexpected wintry scene, as if to remind us that the labours of the renowned engineer and strategist were chiefly concerned with Eastern lands. A good number of friends and relatives, with Sir Patrick's two sons, Captain and Mr. William Raeburn Andrew, were present. Among the first-mentioned were General Sir Frederic Goldsmid, one or two members of Parliament, Mr. Charles Edward Johnston (Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.), Mr. Marvin, M. Chevalier, and Colonel Lawrie. All were sheltered by a tent during the last ceremony over the grave, in which was at length deposited all that was mortal of the great projector of the Euphrates Valley scheme, and the 'apostle' and 'pioneer of Indian railways.'"

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 20.

Sir A. R. Thompson, the retiring Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, was entertained at a farewell dinner in the Calcutta Town-hall on Thursday last. About 250 persons were present, including all the leading members of the European and Mahomedan communities, the Hindoos not being largely represented. The Hon. Mr. Cruickshank, President of the Chamber of Commerce, was in the chair. In proposing Sir A. R. Thompson's health he dwelt in terms of high praise on the latter's thirty-five years of service in India, pointed out the great progress in material prosperity which Bengal had made under his rule, and said that he had set an example of manly devotion to duty, wise moderation, courage in expressing his convictions, high character, and lofty aims which had won him general esteem and respect. The toast was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

Sir A. R. Thompson, in replying, spoke of the great increase of work and responsibility which now fell upon the man administering the vast province of Bengal, and said the Lieutenant-Governor of that province was now often called upon to perform the impossible task of reconciling two public opinions. For himself, while he had always been sincerely anxious to exercise impartiality, he had never attempted to serve two masters. He could not ignore the fact that circumstances connected with his administration had brought non-official Englishmen and himself into closer connection than was ordinary. Those circumstances were not of their seeking, and were not allowed to come into public prominence without the strongest protest and warnings on his part. But when once they were promulgated, he thought the issues too vital, both to England and to India, to justify any other action than that which the non-official community had adopted. In presence of races divided by every form of creed and religion the power of England was the bulwark against anarchy; but he trusted that there would always be between the people of the country and Englishmen mutual forbearance, friendship, and generosity—a sentiment on which alone the highest welfare of India depended.

After dinner an evening party was held, when a numerous signed address was presented to Sir A. R. Thompson, who again spoke. He dwelt on the necessity of mutual forbearance by the different races. Yesterday a deputation of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce waited on Sir A. R. Thompson and presented an address from that body, in which he was thanked for the courteous attention always paid by him to the Chamber's representations, and for the interest he had shown in the development of the province. One of the oldest residents in Calcutta writes to me regarding these demonstrations in honour of Sir A. R. Thompson:—

"I have known all public movements for thirty years, and I never before saw the Mahomedans join as one body in any movement as in this. They have awakened. For you will remember they refused to join the National Congress. They took the English view in their evidence before the Public Service Commission, and they now distinctly refuse to follow the Hindoos in reviving all the feeling created by the Ilbert Bill. They have nobly supported the movement in honour of Sir A. R. Thompson. Out of 23,000 rupees collected for the memorial, only 3,000 came from Hindoos, and of that sum 1,500 came from two men."

Sir Steuart Bayley will arrive here to-morrow, and assume the Lieutenant-Governorship on April 2nd. Sir A. R. Thompson will leave for home on the following day.

The mercantile and planting communities seem to have at last shaken off the apathy with which they at first regarded the proceedings of the Public Service Commission. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has forwarded to the Commission a letter signed by thirty-four firms of the highest standing, embracing all branches of trade in the province and all industries in which capital is invested. The letter begins by saying that the mercantile community had at first supposed that the Commission intended to deal with questions requiring special knowledge as to the best methods of selecting candidates for the Civil Service, and did not intend to consider radical changes in the fundamental principles of government. The publication of the evidence had, however, shown that proposals calculated to substitute more or less completely Native for English administration were being discussed before the Commission.

It goes on to point out that the great trade of Bengal was created mainly by British enterprise and capital, and that an enormous amount of British capital is sunk in the tea, silk, indigo, and jute industries, as well as in railways, mills, and manufactories. A stable and efficient Government, enjoying the confidence of Europeans and Natives, is a necessary condition for the creation and the continuance of those results. The moment it is felt that India is to be made the theatre of speculative experiments in government the stream of British capital will flow in other and safer directions. The interests of European merchants and of the bulk of the people of India are identical, and are alike opposed to sacrificing efficient administration to the hopes of certain classes, aspirants to office. Experience has shown the merchants that in all sorts of undertakings European supervision, costly though it be, is an essential element of success. Many schemes before the Commission lose sight of the fact that there are well recognised classes of Natives, especially in Bengal, who are naturally fitted for clerical work, but are ordinarily unfit for executive or administrative duties, and that these are the very classes to whom the prizes of open competitive examinations in India must inevitably fall. The result of the adoption of these schemes would be the government of Europeans, Mahomedans, and other strong races by classes who could never without external assistance either seize or retain power. Such government would be a fantastic creation, not a natural growth. It would not command respect or possess any element of stability. Proposals which aim at substituting Natives for Europeans to any considerable extent in the charge of districts and other important executive posts are absolutely subversive, not only of efficiency, but of the political stability of the British Empire in India; and but for the evidence before the Commission would be regarded as outside the range of practical politics.

The proposers of these changes are, the letter goes on, mainly theorists and would-be governors, and do not represent the people. The memorialists are convinced that the only reason why the evidence is so one-sided is that practical men are slow to believe that any scheme which will alter essentially the English character of the administration can ever be seriously contemplated by an English Government.

Mr. Hudson, representative of the planting community on the Commission, has also recorded a protest, in which he says that the mass of the evidence has been taken from Government servants or those aspiring to be Government servants, and that the views of the governed are entirely unrepresented. He himself is satisfied that what the people really want is that the ordinary administration of justice should be purified and more Anglicised. The people feel more confidence in the efficiency, fairness, and freedom from local prejudice of European judges and magistrates than they could feel regarding Hindoos. He, therefore, suggests that the submission of the report be postponed, and that measures be taken to obtain the opinions of the classes to which he refers, as otherwise the Commission's work will be most incomplete and misleading.

The Viceroy left Calcutta on Wednesday for Durbungah and Simla. The proposal to hold a meeting of Council at Delhi has been abandoned, as it was found that the Punjab Land Bills constituted too heavy a piece of work to be hurriedly disposed of. The other members of the Government are leaving daily for the hills. Sir A. Colvin will remain till Friday to bring out the Budget, and will then follow the rest.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 20.

General Low reports that in the attack made on the 9th inst. by Lieutenant Golightly on Boshway's camp the Burman police behaved admirably and hotly pursued the enemy. This incident shows the correctness of General Roberts's opinion that the Burman police, well organised and commanded, will become an efficient force.

Upper Burma still continues to be very disturbed. The official bulletins published by the military authorities from the 7th to 12th of March report fifteen petty skirmishes with generally successful results for us, our casualties being trifling, except in a skirmish on the 9th near Myingyan, in which a party of ten Madras Sepoys was almost destroyed by the insurgents, one private being killed, and two Native officers, five privates, and one follower being severely wounded. The insurgents were numerous and in ambush.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

INDIA'S INTEREST IN A EUROPEAN WAR.

(Pioneer.)

We may take it as certain that England must be eventually dragged into any war which may take place in South-Eastern Europe, and that India will have to play her part in the campaign, but to what point or points her armies would be directed is an open question. We have grown so used to looking westwards from Peshin that our ideas naturally turn to this point; but all action in this quarter must be defensive only. Intrigue at Herat and perhaps in Kabul also might do something to keep us on the alert; but this would not cause any serious danger to India herself so long as the Afghans as a people remained true to their traditional hatred of all intruders. The Indian army, moreover, now stands in rear of the Afghans as their ally and not as their enemy: a novel position we must admit, but one which has its advantages, though it may not recommend itself to those who would join hands with Russia and dispose of Afghanistan under a Central Asian partition treaty. Our answer to any movements of Russian troops upon Herat and into Afghan Turkistan would be an advance so far into South-Eastern Afghanistan, say to Kandahar and the Helmund, as would serve to encourage the Afghans to make a determined effort to harass their enemy from the north; while we should strike elsewhere along the extended communications of Russia which link the Caucasus with the north-western slopes of the Hindu Kush. The great aim, so far as India is concerned, is to bring about a relaxation of Russian pressure upon Afghanistan: if this can be done without a resort to arms so much the better, but that it must be done sooner or later is a matter which scarcely admits of argument. If the military power of Russia is crippled by a European war in which England is not engaged we shall win that relaxation very cheaply indeed; if, on the contrary, Russia, whether by diplomacy or a successful campaign, achieves her purpose in the Balkan Peninsula, the pressure will become more strongly marked than ever, and England will enter on a new lease of trouble in her capacity as an Asiatic Power. Unfortunately for India the balance of power in Europe no longer rests in the hands of England; she can only watch and wait while the Continental Powers marshal their vast armies, though in South-Eastern Europe and Egypt at any rate she must say the last word, no matter what risk of war is involved.

ELEPHANT HUNT IN GURHWAL.

(Pioneer Correspondent.)

The 3rd of February witnessed a sight in the Patli Dun in the Garhwal District which, though perhaps not equal to the recent extraordinary capture of elephants in the Garo hills, was at the same time unique in the annals of elephant-hunting in this part of India.

On the 1st the Lieutenant-Governor, with a party in which the Earl of Stradbroke, Lord Dungarvan, and Mr. Porter represented the T. G.'s, arrived at a forest station named Bhoysar, the Balrampur khedda, encamping the same day at Dadhiya, 1½ miles from the Lieutenant-Governor's camp. News had been received some days before of a herd of elephants which had been marked down for some time on the right bank of the Ramganga, opposite a forest bungalow at Dikhala in a favourable position for khedda operations, and the fiat went forth that they were to be hunted on the 3rd. Accordingly on that morning the khedda elephants started at 4 A.M. and arrived at Dikhala, a distance of eight miles about seven o'clock, and were followed by the Lieutenant-Governor and his party, who arrived in time for breakfast, with the intention of camping there that night. The head was reported to have gone some little way into the hills, and at 10.30 the khedda elephants filed past below the Lieutenant-Governor's camp and were joined by his party, who had all been for the fray—a pad to every two of them. The elephants were all marshalled in single line, and we continued our way, leading into the centre of the hills. The further we proceeded the steeper became the hillsides and our spirits more depressed. At last, after some six miles, we were met by one of the trackers, who gave us the joyful news that the herd had stopped to graze and rest, and were in a very favourable position for hunting. We could hardly believe any ground like that which we had travelled over could be suitable, but hope took the place of despair, and Captain Lachman Dat Singh (the chief of many kheddass, and who had been in charge of the present khedda, and had already caught twenty-eight elephants) and Major Anson jumped off their elephants, and went on ahead to spy the ground and make arrangements. About a mile on, on the further side of a small spur, we looked down on an open level plateau of some 500 yards in length from north to south and 200 in breadth, covered with high elephant grass, in the north-west corner of which the herd was reported to be. The hills all round had already been crowned by sepoy and matchlock men. Through the centre of the plateau ran a forest fire line of some 16 yards in width, and on the west side close to this line was a small knoll jutting a little forward into the plateau, and commanding a view of nearly the whole of it. The sight was a pleasant one, for if the elephants could be prevented breaking at the north-west corner, the knoll could not be better placed for seeing. The arrangements were soon complete, and on the khedda coming up, the Lieutenant-Governor, who had Mr. Ross, Commissioner of Kumaon, on his pad, took up his position with some of his party on the knoll, and fifteen out of the forty-two khedda elephants with some pads were sent across the fire line round to the other side to intercept the herd in the threatened north-west corner. The rest of the party with the khedda elephants, headed by the Captain Sahib and Major Anson, swept round in single file along the east side, and in a minute or so the herd was descried all huddled together and scuttling off as fast as they could. At once the chase began, and in a couple more minutes we were in the midst of the herd, which at the same time was met by the other detachment of the khedda, while the matchlock men kept up a brisk fusillade to frighten the animals back.

Then began a scene of wild excitement and tumult. Seven or eight of the herd were immediately noosed, and piteous and loud were the cries raised by the captors to their brethren to assist in securing the captures by throwing a second noose. But no heed was taken or response given—all the mahouts might have been deaf. Each was far too intent on obtaining on himself the honour and glory (coupled with the substantial reward) of a first noose. Meanwhile the remainder of the herd were turned exactly as hoped for and arranged, and came tumbling along to below the knoll occupied by the Lieutenant-Governor. Some crossed the fire line, giving a clear view of pursuers and pursued, while a few broke back to the north-east, but each was followed, and had to put his best leg forward. Needless haste, for one by one they were noosed, and these mahouts who had been unlucky in gaining a first noose had to be content with a second. One fairly grown muckna, or tuskless male, showed more fight and pluck than the rest. Six or seven times did he charge home, and twice did he succeed in upsetting one of the riders of his opponent, but fortunately without further disaster. Some time before the end, the Lieutenant-Governor and those with him became tired of simply witnessing the fun, and came down and joined in it, the Lieutenant-Governor's large elephant giving material assistance in securing three or four, especially a large muckna, and the small one who had made up his mind not to be caught without fighting to the last. Only three or four out of the whole had escaped. By half-past four the sport was over, and the Lieutenant-Governor started, much pleased at the success of the operations, to his camp. It was difficult to estimate the number of captures, and not until camp was reached did we know that the total was twenty, including an old female, which had been freed as useless for work, and more worry to carry with us than she was worth. So large a capture has never, we believe, been made before in these hunting-grounds, and considering the scenery, the excitement, and the fact that each of the party was thinking that it was he who was seeing most of the fun, we can only hope that it may be the luck of some of us to see its like again.

THE JUBILEE ADDRESSES.

(Times of India.)

Official addresses in India are generally as dry as they are long, and the eloquence that has been stirred into being by the Jubilee of the Queen-Empress says a good deal for the genuineness of the feelings awakened by the occasion. The speeches of the Governor-General, the Governors, the Lieutenant-Governors, and the other dignitaries of the Empire reach an abnormally high level of oratorical power, and although all the addresses were delivered at the same time, each of the speakers has some fresh light to throw upon a subject that might well become hackneyed. Lord Reay, as we have seen, dealt chiefly with the manner in which the Queen's promises in the famous Proclamation of 1858 have been fulfilled, and with the extraordinary changes for the better, administrative and commercial, that India has witnessed during the last half century; and then he applied this test to Bombay. Lord Dufferin, as befitted his position, dealt with the Indian Empire at large, and with the 200,000,000 subjects of the Queen-Empress who were, as he spoke, greeting her Jubilee day, with a unanimity and spontaneity it would be impossible to parallel in any other country in the world. Government "of set purpose," we are told, left the initiative of the rejoicings to the unprompted impulse of the people. "Officialism for once stood upon one side, and left the nation face to face with its Empress." As to their response we can only borrow the most brilliant and effective passage from the Viceroy's speech. "There have," he said, "gone up to-day from every shrine, from every place of worship, from the tabernacle of every heart, prayers for her happiness, blessings on her goodness, and the incense of an honest and trustful devotion." The princes in their durbar, the municipalities in their halls, the soldiers in their barracks, the citizens in their pavilioned streets, the ryots in their humble homesteads, all felt that such a day of retrospect as this was a fitting occasion for mutual congratulation on a reign which had "encompassed and endowed the land with universal peace—which has brought justice to every cottage door—which has bridged the floods and pierced the jungle—which has converted millions of barren acres into well-watered plains—which has sensibly diminished the risks both of famine and of pestilence—which has lit a hundred lamps of learning in every chief centre of population and placed within the reach of the humblest Indian student the accumulated wealth of Western learning, science and experience." The world, he tells us, has never had a more prosperous reign, a more blameless ruler, or a sovereign more deeply beloved. And then he gives us an experience of his own, which is doubly valuable as coming from a Governor-General of India, who has been entrusted in many other parts of the world with offices of only less importance. "Believe me," he says, "I speak from personal knowledge when I say that, among her many pre-occupations and anxieties, there is no section of her subjects whose interests she watches with more loving or affectionate solicitude than your own."

But Lord Dufferin chiefly rejoices in the past because it is the parent and creator of the future; and in words that will be most carefully weighed and considered by the educated classes, he warmly approves of their natural ambition to be more extensively associated in the administration of their own domestic affairs. "Glad and happy," he adds, "should I be if during my sojourn among them circumstances permitted me to extend and to place upon a wider and more logical footing the political status which was so wisely given a generation ago by that great statesman, Lord Halifax, to such Indian gentlemen as by their influence, their acquirements, and the confidence they inspired in their fellow-countrymen were marked out as useful adjuncts to our Legislative Councils." This from so cautious a speaker as the Viceroy is very like a promise to introduce the representative principle into the Legislative Councils, and so should be a grand and important step towards a homogeneous community, a loyal, patriotic and compacted whole, which in the far distance the Viceroy sees to be evolved out of the present intricate and imperfectly adjusted mechanism of India. Sir R. Thompson also chooses to look beyond the already visible beginning of the dispersion of social prejudices and the actual advent of a higher civilisation. "If," he says, "fifty years of a pure and good reign have seen great things for India, no one will venture to say under English supremacy, harder though the problem may be, that the fifty years to come shall not see even greater things than these." The Right Hon. R. Bourke, addressing a people extending from the Chilka Lake to the coast of Malabar, who were sending up their prayers from church and mosque and temple, is in his turn able to foretell with confidence that the triumphs of the future will be no less conspicuous than the triumphs of the past. He adds:—"The progress of the Victorian era is not ephemeral. Great as the benefits are which that reign has conferred upon India, they are not only valuable in themselves, but perhaps more valuable for the wide foundation they have laid for future prosperity. Education, railroads, telegraphs, sanitation, water-supply are prolific parents, and will be productive of numerous blessings yet unborn." The same thought runs through the address made by Mr. Justice West on behalf of the Bombay University, though he takes the intellectual rather than the material side. "We see," he says, "literature and philosophy occupying year by year new fields of thought and of research. We see science dowering society with new comforts and conveniences, and now inviting our studious youth to a mastery of the long hidden resources of nature." In hundreds and thousands of addresses this idea was re-echoed and repeated all over India.

But the wonderful universality of the rejoicings is to be found in the hearts of the people themselves. We certainly remember nothing like it. It is visible in each one of the numberless accounts of the festivities we have received from all parts of India. We have seen what Lord Dufferin and Mr. Bourke said on this head, and we may be permitted to let the Bombay Municipality speak for all the other Municipalities, because, as Captain Moorland said, there are nowhere else so many different creeds gathered together. "To-day," he continues, "all these races are animated by but one feeling; and the worshippers, under divers forms, of the Great God of all mankind, have given utterance to but one prayer. For in every Christian church, in every Jewish synagogue, at every Hindoo shrine, in every Mahomedan mosque and Parsee fire-temple, crowds of your Majesty's happy and loyal subjects will to-day offer to Almighty God a fervent prayer that He will continue to bestow upon your Majesty His choicest blessings." We saw the universality and oneness of this feeling in the way which our Mahomedars illuminated their mosques, a tribute only once paid before—at the time of the Prince of Wales's visit. We saw it in the long processions, all the members of which paused on the Esplanade to beat their hands and do Poojah to the white marble statue of the Queen. We saw it in the friendliness of the immense crowds that poured through our streets from sunrise to midnight. The police and the public had a common object—to make everything pass off pleasantly. Not only have we not heard of a single accident, but for the first time in our experience we have not received a single letter of complaint. Those who are acquainted with London or Paris on a day of public rejoicing and with the list of casualties that inevitably follow, are alone able to appreciate the admirable tact of the Bombay policemen and the wonderful good temper exhibited by the Bombay crowds. Here we may leave the rejoicings with the comfortable conclusion that they were carried even into our jails and prisons and penal settlements. Ten per cent. of all the convicts under sentence were set at large, and to the others, wherever possible, some measure of grace and clemency was dealt out. In all 21,838 criminals, 1,467 of whom are women, were set free, and the list of women was made to include all female convicts whose offences were not of a serious nature. Thus, from the highest class to the lowest, the Jubilee of the Queen-Emress is a day to be long remembered.

AN INDIAN NAVY.

(Bombay Gazette.)

In these economical times it is curious to note that nothing has been done to work one of the most expensive services somewhat more cheaply. The East Indian Squadron consists of ships of the Royal Navy, manned throughout by British sailors and serving as a means of relieving the Admiralty Budget at the expense of India. Many reasons were given for abolishing the old Indian Navy; but none were really sufficiently strong to justify its abolition and the result is not beneficial to this country. Why should not the Indian fleet be officered on the same principle as the Staff Corps, viz., by officers drawn from the Royal Navy in their youth and devoting their lives to the service of India? Such officers would be personally better off than they are at present, for Indian allowances are always high. The crews would, however, be formed of lascars instead of blue-jackets, and this would be far more economical and just as efficient for ordinary duties. There is no reason why the lascar should not be as good as the sepooy, and we have long since ceased to distrust the latter. Certainly the inhabitants of Bombay, accustomed to the stalwart forms of the Indian Marine, would feel no serious qualms about trusting the defence of their coast line to men of that stamp. The Indian Marine performs its present duties very effectively, and the service might be extended with advantage. England is too slow to see that India has outgrown its childhood and should be allowed to stand alone as far as possible. We are far too dependent on the Home Government for our finances to stand a fair chance of recovery. If we had our own Navy all the payments would be made in rupees, and we should save the loss by exchange on some of the most considerable of our Government remittances. Nor can the financial question only be considered, for we should be able to make certain of obtaining the vessels we required instead of those the Admiralty choose to send, and our fleet would soon become one of the best in the world, instead of being, as far as vessels and material go (for we except the personnel of course) in such a state that Lord Brassey describes it in his Naval Annual, as being with the exception of the Australian squadron, the worst and weakest squadron in the English Navy. Our sailors are the best that can be got; but sailors are of little good without ships and material suitable to modern warfare. England's great naval supremacy is most conspicuous in the speed of her ships, yet with the single exception of the Dacchante, which can, we believe, steam 15 knots, the average speed of the vessels in the East Indian Squadron is about 12 knots an hour, while some, as, for instance, the Woodlark, can only move at 10 knots an hour. And these speeds are high speeds, and not those at which the ships ordinarily travel. If one of the 10 knots boats wishes to go 1,000 miles, she must perform that journey at the lightning speed of 14½ knots an hour. We are gradually progressing in Bombay towards a state of preparedness for war, but we are yet a long way from that desirable consummation. It must be confessed that we are often too ready, in India, to be satisfied with inefficient weapons and material, to rest content with Snider rifles and muzzle-loading guns, while other countries have steel breech-loaders and repeating rifles. But we may give our rulers the credit of believing that, if they had an Indian Navy under their own control, they would insist on having only vessels that were suitable to modern conditions of warfare. Besides which the ships could be chosen with a view to the work required of them, certain types being told off to defend the more important harbours, and others formed into a cruising squadron to act where required. The slave-catching might be done by ships of the Royal Navy specially despatched to the African Coast for that purpose, and the Indian fleet would then be at liberty to attend to purely Indian interests. Even the Red Sea cruising might, perhaps, be more satisfactorily performed by English ships, as the questions that arise on the west coast are Imperial rather than Asiatic; but possibly this pleasant trip would not be much missed. The whole of the trooping service, both home and local, would, of course, be worked exclusively by the new Navy, and here, again, money would be saved by the substitution of lascars for sailors. The warrant officers would, of course, all be Europeans, and so would some of the petty officers, but lascars and rescued slaves would form the crew. These latter make good sailors, and being strong, hardy, and accustomed to the heat, are extremely suitable for tropical work. We do not, of course, mean to say that the lascar is as good as the blue-jacket, but he is efficient and much cheaper. Economy is the vital question just now as far as India is concerned, and ought to be studied in every way. The employment of lascars is recommended on the principle which has caused the creation of the Native Army. If, instead of 60,000 English troops and 120,000 sepoys, we were to garrison India with 180,000 British soldiers we should, undoubtedly, have a most powerful army; but no administrator dreams of such an arrangement, simply because of the enormous expense. Besides which the best Native regiments are fully equal to Europeans for all ordinary duties, and, when led by Englishmen and mixed with British troops, they prove their right to act beside them on the battlefield. There can be no reason why the conditions that have proved satisfactory on land should not equally apply to service afloat, and the experiences of the Indian Marine show the value of lascars. If considered necessary, a portion of the crews, say sufficient to work the more important guns, might be composed of Europeans, at any rate in each man-of-war almost every duty can be thoroughly carried out by Natives, provided they have three or four Europeans among them to give them a lead; and this applies as much to working the guns as to anything else. That Europeans and Natives will work together cordially has been proved by the excellence of the mountain batteries where we find them mixed on parade with good effect, and the same kind of arrangement could be introduced for the Indian Navy. But the work of administration would be greatly facilitated by having the whole of the forces of the Indian Empire under the direct command of its ruler, instead of being obliged to work through a different department, as is now necessary when dealing with Naval affairs in India. The anomaly is one that should no longer be suffered to exist, and, as India grows more and more independent and self-reliant as she becomes more and more self-supporting, the incongruity of a navy not under the control of the Government of India, but borrowed from the mother country, becomes more apparent. A great deal is said, with good reason, about the necessity of supporting local industries and local manufactures; yet one of the most important of the national defences is worked from home instead of being supplied from material in this country. The tremendous loss by exchange, which yearly occurs, and troubles financiers on account of its uncertainty and increasing size, should be reduced by all possible means, and the only way in which the revenue and expenditure can be balanced satisfactorily is by placing everything, as far as possible, on the rupee footing. By making all contracts in rupees the outgoings would be accurately known. Bombay, with an enlarged dockyard, would be quite equal to the maintenance of the Indian navy, and the more the resources of Bombay are developed from a maritime point of view the better for the country. Bombay is the maritime presidency, and its advantages should be fully developed. From an economical point of view, if from no other, the proposal we have made is deserving of consideration.

A SAD FATALITY.

(Times of India.)

It is with deep regret that we have to announce the death at sea, under melancholy circumstances, on the 26th ultimo, of Mr. Frank White, lately a member of the staff of the Bombay Gazette. Mr. White had determined, on the conclusion of his engagement with the Gazette, in April, to proceed to Australia to take up an appointment which he had secured on the Argus at Melbourne. Owing to the illness of one of his secretaries, Lord Brassey, when in Bombay, engaged Mr. White to assist him, and learning that he was proceeding to Australia, made him an offer to take him to Singapore, and possibly further, as the locum tenens of the secretary. This offer Mr. White, with the consent of Mr. Geary, accepted, and he accordingly sailed from Bombay in the Sunbeam on Tuesday, the 22nd ultimo. When he left he was apparently in good health and spirits, and spoke hopefully and cheerfully of his future prospects. He expressed his delight at the prospect of visiting Borneo, a country which he had long desired to see, and he seemed pleased to think that fortune should have placed it in his power to see several out-of-the-way places, which, under ordinary circumstances, he could never have hoped to visit. He complained, it is true, of the strain which the work he had had in connection with the Jubilee, combined with the literary duties he had performed for Lord and Lady Brassey, had put upon him; but he seemed to think that a few days at sea would put everything right. Certainly none of his friends anticipated that there was anything in his condition to give rise to the least anxiety. Unfortunately, however, even's proved that his condition was not satisfactory, for the Sunbeam had left Jinjeera, he, in broad daylight, deliberately jumped overboard. The yacht was in full sail at the time, but immediately the alarm was given by the helmsman, who had witnessed the affair, steps were taken to rescue the unfortunate young man. Life buoys were thrown overboard, the Sunbeam was brought to, and a boat was lowered, but no trace of the body was discovered, although an active search was made. Eventually the Sunbeam continued her voyage to Goa, where the news of the sad event cast a gloom over the festivities which had been arranged in Lord and Lady Brassey's honour.

Many people who knew Mr. White will share the regret we feel at this melancholy ending of a promising career. He was a man of good parts, and would, if he had lived, have doubtless made a mark in his profession. Personally he was much liked by his friends and associates. His bright and genial disposition made him a general favourite, and his ordinary demeanour was not such as to lead one to suppose that his death would have been of the character it was. At the same time his nervous organization had been considerably affected by severe illness which necessitated his going home in the summer of 1885. On his return to India in November of that year, he was prostrated by an attack of sciatica, which confined him to his room for several months, and induced insomnia in a severe form. Even after he recovered he was frequently a prey to sleeplessness, and he was compelled to take sedative drugs to obtain rest. During these attacks of sleeplessness he suffered a good deal from nervous depression, though when he was well he was in excellent spirits. It is very probable that as a result of one of these periods of insomnia his mind became temporarily deranged, and he was led to commit an act which, at any other time, would seem to have been impossible. Mr. White has two brothers, both medical men, one in practice in England and the other in Australia. He also leaves two sisters.

BENGAL.

DURING his approaching visit to Behar, his Excellency the Viceroy will, it is hoped, open the recently-constructed bridge over the river Gunduck, connecting Tirhut and the North-Western Provinces by way of the Bengal and North-Western. The bridge is of eight spans of 250 feet, and connected with it is a viaduct half-a-mile long. The structure ranks, with the Benares and Jubilee bridges, among the greatest works of the kind in India.

THE annual report of the Calcutta Public Health Society brings to light some curious facts in connection with mortality in that city. The Society reckons that the preventible mortality among wage-earners in the prime of life in Calcutta and the suburbs is not less than three thousand per annum, and that the earnings thus lost to the survivors cannot be less than three lakhs per annum, or a capitalized loss, assuming an average of 20 years of life, of 60 lakhs. But each case of preventible death implies 25 cases of preventible illness, and, assuming each to involve two months' loss of wages, this implies a further loss of 12 lakhs of rupees. These figures are, of course, as the report observes, "mere rough approximations, but they deserve the attention of those who oppose sanitary improvements on the ground of the burthen which they impose on the poorer classes of taxpayers. Nothing, it is certain, is so costly to the wage-earners' class as a state of things which incapacitates a considerable fraction of their number from earning wages, either temporarily by illness or permanently by death." The fact that, out of a population of three-quarters of a million, no less than 250,000 persons applied in the course of 1886 for relief at the various hospitals and dispensaries of Calcutta and its suburbs, is a striking exemplification of the enormous amount of disease which prevails, and the generally low condition of a population in which such extensive remedial measures are found necessary.

MADRAS.

THE Right Hon. Robert Bourke, Governor of Madras, unveiled a portrait of the late Mr. W. P. Adam in the Banqueting Hall, Madras, on the 22nd ult.

A SON was born to his Highness the Nizam on the 21st ult. Salutes in honour of the event were fired by the artillery of the Paigah Nobles and the Goshamahai Troops, and the Minister and the principal nobles presented nuzzers to his Highness in the afternoon. The child died on the 23rd ult.

IT having been elicited in professional evidence given before the jury summoned at the inquiry held into the recent fire at Madras that the kerosene oil used for illuminating purpose at the fair had been drawn from a supply of oil that had depreciated to a flashing point of 63 degrees, although the oil had, when imported, passed the test of 74 degrees under the Petroleum Act, arrangements, it is reported, are to be made by the Chemical Examiner to ascertain the causes of the same and to suggest such remedial measures in storage, &c., as will prevent this depreciation in quality of such dangerous inflammable substance as kerosene oil.

As the Madras Government is still of opinion that the European Prison at Ootacamund should be abolished, unless it can be utilised to a greater extent than is at present the case, the Inspector-General has been directed to give three months' notice to the members of the establishments of both the European Prison and the District Jail. But before giving definite orders to close these prisons, the Government has asked the Government of India to inquire whether other local Governments would be willing to transfer European prisoners to Ootacamund. If a jail population sufficiently numerous to warrant the large outlay can be ensured, the Madras Government will sanction the retention of the jails, but otherwise they must be abolished.

BOMBAY.

SIRDAR DILER JUNG has resigned his appointment in the British Service. The Sirdar was an Assistant Commissioner in Berar when his services were first placed at the disposal of his Highness's Government, eight or nine years since, and until his resignation a few weeks ago, his name was still borne on the list of the Berar Commission.

THE Thakore Saheb of Morvi has arrived in Bombay. He has come to personally solicit his Excellency the Governor to honour his flourishing little State by formally opening the new line of railway from Wudhwan to Morvi, a length 62 of miles. He is accompanied by Mr. White, C.E., the Manager and Engineer-in-Chief of the line. The Thakore Saheb, with his party, is residing at Walkeshwar.

THE civil suit instituted by the late Maharaja Holkar against Subkaran Baldeo, claiming Rs. 2,60,000, and which created a great sensation in the mercantile community of Indore, has been decided by the Sudder Court in favour of the banker, who is allowed costs, amounting to Rs. 8,300 out of the Rs. 50,000 he claimed as damages. The defendant was represented by the Honorable Rao Saheb Vishwanath Mandlik and Messrs. Athalay and Khory.

A CURIOUS case of legal obligation in connection with the question of remarriage of Hindu widows is likely to come before the Bombay Court of Small Causes. The circumstances of the case are that a few years ago a young widow, named Mankore, of the Bania caste, was remarried, under the guardianship of Mr. Madhavdas Rugunathdas of Bombay, to Mr. Bavanji Gordhan, and that she proceeded to the village of Kundla in Kathiawad. She had received by her former marriage a certain sum of money, the interest of which was regularly paid to her annually by the trustees whom she had nominated herself for the due administration of the fund. The trustees have, however, discontinued the payment of interest on the ground that she had become disentitled to the benefit of the trust by reason of her remarriage in contravention of Hindu law and usage. It will be interesting to know the result of this law-suit, keeping in view an enactment of the Supreme Legislature, whereby, we believe, all disabilities arising out of remarriage among Hindus as regards inheritance, &c., have been removed.

THE property known as the Trinity Chapel and the Indo-British Institution at Sonapore has been purchased by Mr. Adamjee Peerbhoy, who has written a letter to the Bombay Town Council asking for permission to convert it into a market. There was some discussion on the subject at the meeting of the Council on Wednesday, when the Municipal Commissioner observed that if it was considered desirable to sanction a private market in that district the application of Mr. Adamjee deserved careful consideration. Dr. Cowasjee Hormusjee was opposed to the idea of having a new market at Dhobi Talao, as he feared that it was likely to draw off a portion of the custom from the Crawford Markets, and thus diminish the revenue which the Municipality derived from that source. Mr. Raghunath N. Khote, on the other hand, did not share the fear of Dr. Cowasjee, saying that there has long been a market in the neighbourhood of the one which it was proposed to be established, but it had never proved in any way a rival of the Crawford Markets. Mr. Khote thought that a new market in Dhobi Talao, built with every regard to sanitary principles, would be a boon to the populous district. The chairman, Mr. Dosabhoj Framjee, expressed his general agreement with this view, observing that the old market in the neighbourhood of the Trinity Chapel was a disgrace to the locality, and that it appeared to have been erected without any regard to considerations of health or convenience. Mr. Ollivant asked for an adjournment of the discussion, saying that the question was one of importance, and required to be considered in all its bearings. The matter was accordingly adjourned for a week.

PASSAGES have been engaged by the Florio Rubatino Line s.s. Dominico Balduino, leaving Bombay on the 1st April next, for the Nawab Busheer-oo-Dowlah Ameer-i-Ackber Asman Jah Bahadur, brother-in-law to H.H. the Nizam, and his suite, viz.:—his chief secretary, Col. Cockburn, his private secretary, Mr. Dossabhoj Nusserwanjee Chenoy, his A.D.C., Syud Booknoodeen, one private medical attendant, and one Persian private secretary, and five or six other followers.

Mr. H. W. ULOTH, who some time ago was Assistant Superintendent in the P. and O. Co.'s office at Bombay, and who by his winning manners gained much popularity among Native merchants and others, has assumed charge of the office of Superintendent in place of Mr. Parker, who left for Europe by the last mail-steamer. He was met at the Bander among others by Mr. John Marshall, Mr. Joomabhoy Lalljee, and Mr. Premchund Roychund, the last of whom placed round his neck a beautiful garland of flowers as he was about to leave the shore.

PUNJAB.

THANKS, mainly to the exertions of Moulvi Abu Said Mohammed Husain, of Lahore, the Indian Government has been moved to drop, henceforth, the term "Wahabi" in official correspondence in the Punjab and throughout India. The name, in spite of the implication that he who bears it "obeys God's orders," is not of good repute, for reasons neither pleasant nor profitable to dwell upon, and the sect, in future to be undistinguished from Mahomedans, wish to be relieved of it.

THE report of the Lahore Medical School, for the year 1885-86, is the last that this institution will submit in its restricted capacity of being able to educate up to the degree of Licentiate of Medicine only. Within the past year additional Professors have been appointed; the school has been advanced to the dignity of a College; and it is now in a position to educate up to the degrees of M.B. and M.D. During the year 1885-86, the school continued to do good and useful work. There was a marked improvement in the attendance of the students, of which there were 91 in the English class, and 152 in the Hindustani class. Thirteen Native and twelve European midwives were instructed by Dr. Elizabeth Beilby, who also taught a nursing class of nineteen ladies and six nurses. During the year under notice, Surgeon-Major Laurie left Lahore for Hyderabad. The Lieutenant-Governor has placed on record his high sense of the zeal and skill which Dr. Laurie brought to bear on his work at the Medical School. Sir Charles Aitchison also takes the occasion of his passing the work of the school in review, for the last time, to notice the long and valuable services of Surgeon-Major T. E. B. Brown.

BRITISH TRADE WITH INDIA.

Those who have doubts on the subject of the importance of our trade relations with India should read Mr. J. E. O'Connor's last Report on Indian Trade. The trade which India carries on with the United Kingdom is more than half—55 to 56 per cent.—of the whole volume of Indian trade. There is a very small reduction on the value of our exports to India in the year reported on. Cotton goods, which constitute about one-half of the whole, show a slight decline. There is an improvement, however, of nearly 2 per cent. in the value of Indian exports, though the total is still much below the value of some previous years. The Indian export of wheat grows in importance yearly. It was larger last year than ever before, exceeding one million tons. This trade is not more than sixteen years old, and may be said to have been created by the Suez Canal. The export last year exceeded that of the year preceding by more than 5,000,000 cwt., the total being 21,000,000 cwt. Of this large quantity 12,000,000 cwt. came to England, which is rather more than we received from Russia, nearly as much as came to us from Pacific ports, very considerably more than half what we received from Atlantic ports, and nearly one-sixth of our total import. India's contribution to the grand total in the previous year was a little more than one-eighth. Every year, too, sees a larger export of tea from India, and, speaking broadly, it all comes to England, and is consumed here. The taste for Indian tea has grown remarkably in this country, and possibly it may be developed elsewhere in time, but, outside the United Kingdom, China has at present the monopoly. Our total import of tea last year was over 200,000,000 lbs., and of this more than 66,000,000 lbs., or one-third of the whole, came from India. India is becoming a wine-growing as well as a tea-growing country. Hopes are entertained that the wines being made in Cashmere may before long be placed well within the reach of Indian consumers.

THE RIGHT HON. R. BOURKE'S SPEECH.

The Right Hon. R. Bourke, in acknowledging the receipt of addresses to Her Majesty on Jubilee Day at Madras, spoke as follows:—

My Lords, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I deem it a great honour that it has fallen to my lot as Governor of Fort St. George to receive this remarkable and memorable address. It has been my wish to do so in such a way and in such conditions that all classes of the community can participate in the ceremonial. In the name of our gracious Sovereign the Queen-Empress, I beg to thank the people of this Presidency, European and Native, of every caste and creed, for the hearty expression of loyalty which their address contains. It has been unanimously agreed to by the people of this Presidency from the Chilka Lake to the coast of Malabar. It is a worthy portion of that joyous and harmonious chorus of thanksgiving which this day resounds from the Khyber Pass to Cape Comorin. It is in thorough accord with those prayers which since sunrise this morning have been offered up from church, mosque, and temple, throughout the Indian Empire, for the welfare of our Sovereign. It will be my duty to transmit it to the feet of the Throne, enclosed in a casket of gold and ivory, which I believe will be an exquisite specimen of Indian art and industry. It is not for me to presume to interpret the sentiments of Her Majesty upon receiving this respectful token of the homage of her Madras subjects. But the records of Her Majesty's daily life supply striking and ample proof of the interest she takes in everything which affects the progress and prosperity and security of her people. I am therefore confident that Her Majesty will be gratified to learn that the people of Southern India are convinced that her reign has been distinguished by that glorious advance of civilisation which your address so eloquently describes. It will be pleasing to her heart to know that the people of this Presidency remember with gratitude the efforts which her subjects at home made to alleviate the suffering in this land when it was visited by a severe famine. Rest assured that these acknowledgments on your part will cement more closely than ever the hearts of the British people to their fellow-subjects in India. Your address alludes to the peaceful triumphs of the past which have marked the reign of Her Majesty. Depend upon it the triumphs of the future will be no less conspicuous. The progress of the Victorian era is not ephemeral: Great as the benefits are which that reign has conferred upon India, they are not only valuable in themselves, but perhaps more valuable for the wide foundation they have laid for future prosperity. Education, railroads, telegraphs, sanitation, water-supply are prolific parents, and will be productive of numerous blessings yet unborn. But if our prosperity here is still to increase, if the condition of the millions who are still very poor is to be raised and ameliorated the loyal people of Madras know full well that this can only be attained by the maintenance of that Paramount Power whose just and vigorous rule in India is the only guarantee the people have against the recurrence of that strife, misery, and oppression which the page of history painfully records. May those whose duty it is to serve the Queen and Empire in India, both in high as well as subordinate office, ever remember this Jubilee day. May we recollect the devoted loyalty displayed on this occasion by our Native fellow-subjects, and may this thought inspire us all to do our best to promote their welfare, knowing that in devoting ourselves to that object we are fulfilling the wishes of our august Sovereign.

KHAKI UNIFORM.

A correspondent writes:—"We hear there is some talk of doing away with khaki uniform altogether. The Commander-in-Chief himself wears woollen cloth of the right khaki colour, while some of his staff wear woollen but not of this right colour, and the rest wear, of course, Sir Arthur Hardinge's cotton drill, as laid down in Army Orders. None of them, except, perhaps, the lithe figure of the Prince, can be said to look well with the sword belt buckled over (not under) a looseish coat or blouse. This latter both racks up above and sticks out frill-wise below the belt, especially after riding. Nothing will make this buckling of belts over a loose coat even decently nice to look at, and many of the staff show to little advantage. Where a manly corporation is seen à la John Bull, no amount of pulling down one's 'skirt,' &c., will enable the wearer to look otherwise than extremely uncomfortable, to say the least. There can be no doubt that the old system prevailing with the white clothing of John Company's days of wearing the belts 'underneath' the undress tunics was a right one, especially in hot weather, as it allows of the circulation of air. In the Quetta district nothing but woollen clothing should be worn, of course; but we confess that for the plains cotton cloth is just as essentially necessary for officers as for men. If the mere colour of khaki be objected to, the objection is sentimental and unsoldierly. There is a more serious objection, and that is only really applicable to European officers, in the way of making and wearing it. The European officer's sword drags down his waist, and if worn outside a loose blouse of course causes the skirts, as before noticed, to form a frill as it were. He becomes at once more or less instar a little boy. He only wants the large white collar round his neck to complete the picture. White, neat-coloured shoulder straps of cotton of one good khaki dye would, we maintain, still be the best material for the plains; but with a sine qua non, as far as officers are concerned, that the sword belts should be worn under, not over, a neat patrol jacket or blouse of khaki. The blouse suits the sepoy even with his belt over it, as his wide Zouave breeches dissembles the frill-like sticking out of his skirts—nay, are in keeping with the loose blouse. Against the colour of khaki, under reasonable care as to the dye chosen, there is really nothing valid to be urged. It wears well, and is little seen at a distance. Gaiters, if carefully looked after, and kept white, or of polished brown leather, would make it look smart enough even for garrison work."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CAPTAIN CAZALET, 1st Bengal Cavalry, has taken over command of Fort Jumrood.

THE 12th Bengal Cavalry arrived at Peshawur from Nowshera on the 19th ultimo.

CAPTAIN ALEXANDER, 16th Bengal Cavalry, has been granted one year's leave of absence to England, on urgent private affairs.

THE services of Colonel J. Hills, C.B., are replaced at the disposal of H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief on the reduction of the forces in Burma.

PRIVATE McLOUGHLIN, Highland Light Infantry, committed suicide by hanging himself at Umballa, while a patient in hospital.

COLONELS LOCKHART AND LOWE, who are now in command of brigades in Burma, will be shortly brought on the permanent establishment in India as Brigadiers.

THE Government of India has called for the names of officers of the Staff Corps who are desirous of being appointed Assistant Commissioners of the 4th Grade in Burma on Rs. 450.

MAJOR N. P. O'GORMAN officiates as Assistant Adjutant-General, Lahore Division, vice Colonel Wolseley, C.B., appointed to command the Saugor Brigade.

AN official notification may shortly be expected, stating that the following additional regiments are to be raised in the Bengal Army:—One of Goorkhas; three of Sikhs; one of Pioneers; and one squadron of the Guides.

THE following Medical officers have been detailed to proceed to England:—Surgeon-Major Macrobin, by the troopship of March 20th; Surgeon-Major Grose, by the troopship of April 2nd; and Surgeon Brker, by the troopship leaving about the 1st of May.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL A. F. JONES, General List, Infantry, proceeds on six months' leave to Kashmir, from April 15. Captain J. A. Hay, Highland Light Infantry, has been granted leave of absence to England for twelve months on urgent private affairs.

COLONEL J. LEMESURIER, Royal (late Bombay) Engineers, superintending engineer for irrigation in Sind, has been allowed furlough to Europe for one year, on private affairs; and Colonel S. Fellows, S.C., commandant 8th Bombay Infantry, leave for the same period.

THE time-expired men and other details of the Sirhind Division, for the troopship of March 20, left Umballa on March 1; Lieutenants Clough-Taylor, Connaught Rangers, and Downing, Royal Irish Regiment, proceeding in charge. The time-expired men and other details from Peshawur, for March 20 troopship, leave on the 25th instant.

As two of the police battalions for Burma are far from being complete, it has been decided to send the 10th and 33rd Bengal Infantry to Upper Burma. The 28th from Jullunder relieve the 33rd at Agra. Four companies of the 3rd from Saugor relieve the 10th at Nowgong and Banda. The 14th Madras Infantry sail for Rangoon on the 7th inst. A third regiment will also probably be sent. Three out of the four cavalry regiments in Burma will most likely remain there, the 7th Bengal Cavalry only returning. A large proportion of the military police will be mounted, as many as 20 per cent in some battalions.

THE list of officers appointed to the five new regiments now about to be added to the Native Army will probably not be issued for some little time to come, particularly as it is likely that the three high-caste Sikh battalions will be raised slowly owing to the recruitment of police for Burma. The new Pioneer regiment of Muzbi Sikhs (says the Allahabad paper) will be linked with the 23rd and 32nd Pioneers, and will presumably be numbered thirty-four. There will be but little difficulty felt in raising Muzbis, who know they will always be among their caste brethren, and have fixed stations where they can make their home. The other three new battalions can well be numbered 35th, 36th, 37th, and linked together as class regiments. The Bengal Infantry will then be numbered from the 1st to the 45th, with one exception—the 41st are still missing from the list. The raising of the 2nd Battalion of the 3rd Goorkhas will give ten battalions of Goorkhas in addition to the three regiments of Goorkha Light Infantry stationed in Assam. The 18th Bengal Infantry will no doubt send the Goorkhas in its ranks to the 2nd Battalion of the 3rd Goorkhas, as no further recruiting of Goorkhas in outside regiments is to be allowed.

It is reported that the Ameer, as a precaution against a renewal of the Ghilzai rising, is summoning all the head men on whom he can depend to assemble at Cabul on Nauroz, or New Year's Day, the date when it is expected the revolt will break out afresh. Vague rumours that the Ghilzais are collecting continue to arrive.

THE disease called pebrine has played such havoc with the silk-worm in Bengal this year that the very existence of the silk industry is threatened. An expert shortly comes from France to see whether some remedy cannot be devised.

SIR WILLIAM ANDREW, C.I.E.

"THE RAILWAY STATESMAN."

Life's warfare o'er, the battle not yet won,
The victory which he hoped one day to see,
The triumph of science, the bold strategy*
Not yet achieved, though fairly well begun;
The bounteous labours of Sir William's pen
Should guide the minds of patriots yet to come,
Who love Peace more than spirit-stirring drum
Of War, not made for real "mighty men."
Railway apostle, pioneer of lines
In glorious land of Ind, he held his own,
Nor ever when he saw despairing signs
Cloud Hope's success, one scheme would he disown;
Worker for God and man, in earthly mines
Richer than gold—though dead, admired and known!

BY HONOURS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

"The meteoric shower of honours which has descended upon the just and unjust this year not only makes it almost impossible for us to know 'Who's Who in '87,' but has driven some weaker minds to the verge of insanity."—Extract from a Calcutta letter.

I dare not take my walks abroad, my friends I dare not see Where once I used to speak to them, and they would speak to me.
My friends are ochre, black, and white, I count them by the score;
But till I learn last week's Gazette I may not meet them more.
How run's the Doctor's name, Mahi? Mahout? Moham?— Mohunt? Mahomedpudmini, Illuminated Sham?
Dewan-i-Khas or Sri Diwan is Smith unless I err.
No! Smith's Mir Munshi got the Sri, and Smith, himself's the Sir.

So Mrs. Smith is Lady S. and Jones's wife likewise;
Or was it Jones who finished up the batch of C.S.I.'s?
Or was he made a "Rajah Rao?" Alas! my addled brain
Has mixed him with a Boroh Shroff. Bring out the list again!
Smith, B.C.S., K.C.S.I., Jones, C.I.E., C.E.
Brown, Robinson, collectively, K.C.G., M.C.B.
That's better! Gul Mahommed "Rao"; Asraf Mahommed
"Rai";
And "Raja Babu Chatterjee. . . or was he C.S.I.?"

Once more, though madness hover near, that awful list I scan!
Asraf Mahommed seems to be a "Rai Bahadured Khan,"
And Chatterjee's a "Shish Mahal," 'tis plain as printers' ink;
And Pundit Prem Nath Guru Dutt is "Brevet Thakur Spink."

I wonder why, in wriggling fire is limned the Honours roll, [Sirdar Kha nsamah!] and my thoughts slip, eel-like, from control.

Rai, Rao, Dewan, Nawab, C.B., K.C.I.E., Mahout-Bahadur flash across my brain—a gorgeous golden rout.

What ha! What ho! Why stare ye so, oh Lords and Ladies gay?
What means the whisper in the air:—"His mind has given way!"
I am not mad—Rai, Rubee, Rai, Sub Titular Nawab!
Why cramp my limbs with clanking chain; my frame in maniac's garb?

I am not mad. Post! Shwye ya Min! Daulat-Inglishia D—!
Who said, Sir Knights, I am not mad? Bring on your Dukes
I am!

SUBSCRIPTIONS towards the Imperial Institute, and the Victoria Technical Institute at Bangalore, are coming in largely from all parts of the province, and it is expected that a very large sum will be available.

A FRONTIER correspondent writing to the Lahore paper says:—The Bonairwal jirgah came on to Rustum; thence they were conveyed into Murdan, and thence to Peshawur. They were good enough to bring in with them a large band of malefactors, fugitives from British justice, whom they requested our Government to pardon and permit to return to their villages unpunished. This is a fair specimen of the impudence of these frontier tribes. After attacking our territory in time of peace, and harassing our frontier for two or three years, killing a British officer of high rank, two or three sepoys, and some of our villagers, and refusing for a long time to come to terms, although repeatedly invited to do so, they finally condescend to accept the very easy terms offered them, and pay a nominal fine and return a few old rifles; and request the British Government, in return for their affability in making peace, to pardon a few scores of most atrocious criminals who have taken refuge with them from British justice.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

PEGGY: A TALE OF THE IRISH REBELLION.*

There can scarce be much danger that Ireland should pass out of memory in the present day when murders, butcheries, cruelties, and villainies of every sort and description are the daily "bill of fare" of those who read what is going on in the sister island; but there is a likelihood that the events of '98 may not be familiar to a generation who perchance have forgotten that the last century passed to its rest amidst the din of warfare and slaughter. In those days the nation had not forgotten the art of governing, and when the Irish insurgents, incited by French intriguers endeavoured to achieve the so-called independence of their unhappy land, stern and retributive measures soon put an end to the hopes and the follies of those whom plot and passion had led into the paths of crime. Of course some enthusiastic natures, especially amongst the younger members of the upper classes, saw in the rebellion an attempt to secure "Ireland for the Irish." With such persons patriotism, though misplaced, was not altogether dishonourable, and their conduct must be judged by a standard of leniency.

It is in regard to one such individual that the story of "Peggy" takes its rise. Aleck Thornton was a romantic, warm-hearted, enthusiastic youth, full of impulse and overflowing with zeal—characteristics which were easily turned by designing and unscrupulous intriguers to serve the ends of those who were glad to find dupes when the danger was near, but who were equally ready to take credit when their schemes bid fair to prosper. So he left the country for his country's good. And who is "Peggy," the heroine of the tale? A simple, artless country lass, possessing unbounded confidence in the honour of her misguided brother, ready to sacrifice all to save him—one of nature's "noblewomen" in the widest and truest sense of the word. An unsophisticated maiden, the story of her life is told in language plain, simple, unadorned, in entire keeping with the character of the lassie around whom interest centres. There are no exciting "situations" in this romance, no hair-breadth escapes, no violent love scenes or lovers' quarrels. The world it depicts is real, not artificial; the scenes it portrays are linked to the daily round of life and the plain discharge of duties. Yet, withal, the reader will be pleased, the more so—we speak our personal experience in the matter—that the dénouement is entirely unsuspected, and reserved as a "tit-bit" for the last chapter.

MODERN HINDUISM.†

In the present day, when "Zenana Missions" are in high favour, when efforts are being made under the ægis of Lady Dufferin to open out new fields of benevolence amongst the women of India, a work on Modern Hinduism cannot be otherwise than welcome, as tending to throw light upon a subject in regard to which but little is known in this country, and removing the mist of ignorance which veils the inner life of so many millions of Her Majesty's subjects in the sunny East.

And assuredly the reader will find a mine of information anent a variety of subjects. First as to religion. A clear and lucid description is given of the various sects amongst the Hindus, including the modern Deistic bodies which have started into life since the present century dawned upon mankind. It is very generally supposed that Hinduism is a compact system, the forms of worship having existed from time immemorial; but Mr. Wilkins proclaims that the notion is entirely erroneous, and that "there is as great (if not greater) diversity of opinion and practice amongst the peoples of India as amongst those of Christendom." Then, again, as to worship. How few persons who have not visited the East are aware that Hindu temples are for the most part very small, "not being more than 10 or 12 feet square. No congregation gathers in them to witness an imposing ceremonial; no addresses on religion and morals are given; there are no seats for those who come. With the Hindu the object of visiting a temple is simply to walk round the building, hand over his offering to the officiating priest, and, if possible, catch a glimpse of the idol it contains, and after prostrating himself before it to return to his home."

Perhaps, however, the most interesting portions of the work under review is that which touches upon the position of women, especially as regards marriage and widowhood. Here, again, also there is much to learn. It is pretty generally known that amongst the Hindus the remarriage of widows, if not actually forbidden, is, at any rate, discouraged. As to the misery and the immorality which flow from such an unnatural state of things but slight reflection will serve to show that they must be extreme; but it not infrequently escapes notice that as there are no widows of mature years whom a widower can marry, and as of course no single woman is ever allowed to advance in age without being assigned a husband, should the disconsolate spouse want to take a second wife he must choose a girl still in her teens. Marriage between May and December is practically compulsory amongst the Hindus!

It would be easy to dilate upon various other points of interest, such as caste, future rewards and punishments, death, heaven, hell, birth, home life, crime, &c.; but enough has been said to indicate the wide scope of Mr. Wilkins' work, which though written by a clergyman, and dealing with topics in regard to which intolerance is apt to be in the ascendant, is most singularly free from religious bigotry, or sectarian animosity. We have the fullest confidence in recommending this book to the notice of all—and they are legion—who are taking an interest in the East; especially upon the gentler sex, whose sympathies are wont to be moved in favour of their sisters in India, we would urge, read what Mr. Wilkins has to say, and you will be better in a position to appreciate the noble efforts of England to extend to the peoples of the East the pleasures, the happiness, the triumphs which spring from giving power to weakness, and respect to those whom ignorance despises, and barbarism rejects.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.*

Dr. Murray's erudite and comprehensive Philosophical Dictionary of the English Language is destined, it may be feared, to make slower progress than its designers contemplated, the third volume having only just appeared after an interval of eighteen months. Nor is this surprising. The research involved is herculean, and in spite of a very complete division of labour it is obvious that one master-mind must revise the work and make it a homogeneous whole in place of an aggregation of isolated disquisitions; and after all a single brain cannot do more than a fixed amount of work, in the twenty-four hours. Hence delay must arise. Of course it is not overlooked that the letter "B" teems with difficulties. As remarked in the preface, "it contains a comparatively small number of words derived from Latin or Greek, and a preponderating proportion of words of Teutonic origin, first of the native Old English stock, and, secondly, of the early accession which this received from the kindred speech of the Norsemen." Hence research is more laborious and assured results more difficult. Take, for instance, the well known and much-used word "Be." It is amongst the common of the common, in the category of words, every child uses it as soon as speech is attained—yet it takes eight pages of small print to explain its history, its peculiarities, and its idiosyncracies.

It is not within this scope of our design to enter upon an elaborate analysis of this most heroic attempt to give symmetry and form to the somewhat inchoate and ill-digested language of our land. We must content ourselves with directing attention to the appearance of the third volume, and with an assertion that it is in no way inferior to its predecessors in completeness, accuracy, and soberness of judgment. Mr. Murray must be warmly complimented on the mode in which he is discharging his duties as editor of the national work.

WALFORD'S ANTIQUARIAN.

"Walford's Antiquarian" for March, 1887, is, as usual, eminently readable. Amongst so many articles which demand perusal it is difficult to make a selection; but, perhaps, on the whole, the "Literature of Almanacks" is the most interesting. "Collecanea" throws light upon many queer customs and quaint ceremonies. Who, for instance, would ever dream of attaching importance, other than in an economical point of view, to the way one wears out one's shoes?

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Naval Reform" (translated from the French of the late M. Gabriel Charrier), by J. E. Gordon-Cumming (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Trial of Maharajah Nanda Kumar," by H. Beveridge (Thacker and Co.); "Gold and Silver Weighed in the Balance," by T. J. Pollard (Thacker and Co.).

THE Benares Bridge, which will probably be ready for opening next cold season, is more than three times the length of the Hooghly Bridge, and the foundation of the piers is, perhaps, the deepest in the world. Mr. F. T. G. Walton is the resident engineer. Apart from the direct commercial importance of such works, the linking of two railway lines on either side of a great river, observes a Calcutta paper, is of immense advantage to the communications throughout the whole country, increasing, as it does, the workingpower of both the railways connected by enabling them to interchange rolling-stock. This is an advantage from a military, no less than from a trading, point of view, and is likely to be appreciated as much in times of famine as of war. A train leaving Sealdah can now run direct to Peshawur, Kurrachee, Bombay, or Madras, and there is no longer the possibility of rolling-stock lying idle in Eastern Bengal, while it is in urgent request in or beyond the Upper Provinces.

THE BURMA FIELD FORCE.

ALTHOUGH a report which has reached England that all officers and men who have served in the field during active operations in Burma are to be granted one year's additional service towards pension, may not be true, it is to be hoped that some better recognition of hard work done may be awarded to them than the one month's extra batta which, according to another report, is to be the economical dole. There has been no glory in the campaign, which may now be said to have been brought to a close, but there has been hard and tiring work, most harassing and uncongenial to the military temperament, European and Native. General White, in one of his despatches, touched upon the nature of the work in which the troops had been engaged, in addition to fighting—abortive expeditions and marches had to be made, convoys had to be taken over unbridged and unmetalled roads, through flooded paddy-fields in the hot weather and the rains. Telegraphic and postal communications had to be kept up, and there was daily employment for constant patrols and detachments. "All these duties," writes the General, "many of them irksome and monotonous, have been well and quickly performed by the officers and men to whom they have been entrusted; they have entailed much exposure to a trying climate, and a consequent heavy sick and death-rate. The actual resistance offered to our troops has not been very trying to disciplined and well-armed soldiers, but small bodies of those soldiers have often had to stand up against bands whose numbers were estimated in thousands. The favourite field of the dacoits is in a jungle, where the range and precision of the rifle are of little avail, and the troops have been called upon not infrequently to drive them from well-selected positions, such as are afforded by walled pagodas which abound. It is satisfactory to know that order is getting the better of the Burmese dacoit, who as General White writes, "is not a social outcast in Burma. On the contrary, he is the hero of Burmese story and song, and it will be many years before Dacoity dies of inattention." Nevertheless, the latest news from Upper Burma is of a hopeful nature. "Order," says one of the papers to hand by the present mail, "is beginning to take the place of chaos. The large gangs of Dacoits have been completely shattered, and their leaders, accompanied now by the merest handful of followers, are being so ceaselessly pursued that not one of them can find a resting-place for the sole of his foot. Hundreds of the rebels have surrendered, and hundreds more have been disarmed. In fact, the Dacoits of Upper Burma now resemble a regiment of infantry that has been ridden through again and again by a squadron of cavalry, and so scattered and demoralised that to reform into line is for the present matter of impossibility. But it will not do to leave them to come together once more—they must be harried and cheveyed till the last trace of cohesion disappears.

This, however, will not be work for soldiery but for police, and Sir Frederick Roberts seems to be confident that an efficient police force can be drawn from the Burmese population itself. If this be so the withdrawal of the troops may be expedited, and the pacification of the country entrusted to the Native police, which are now being recruited and drilled. But it must be some time before any considerable withdrawal of the military force which is now responsible for the rule of order can take place. But the delay need not hinder the recognition by the State of services so well rendered. The "pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war" have not been the soldier's lot in the Burmese campaign, and so the real hard work is apt to be overlooked where the glitter only of glory is considered. But no troops have deserved better of their country than the officers and men of the European and Native regiments who have carried out the troublesome and irksome duties imposed upon them with such creditable and unflinching determination in the face of so many drawbacks."

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

[PREFATORY, COMMUNICATED.]

THE depreciation of the rupee is a matter of deep importance and absorbing interest to all who have commercial, military, or social intercourse with our great Indian dependency. A full and clear knowledge of the currency question is a necessary item of education to the merchant, financier, and statesman. But while the question is a momentous one, and the solution of the difficulties encompassing the subject a comparatively easy task of almost self-evident conclusiveness, the topic has become entangled with so many opposing views, specious arguments, plausible theories, and advocated remedial measures that light has been transformed into darkness, and simplicity exchanged for confusion most confounded. It therefore becomes essential, before commencing a discussion of and examination into the apparent intricacies of exchange, to remind our readers of one or two fundamental laws of cosmopolitan economy. The value of money and the advantages resulting from its possession are great, and cannot be over-estimated. Money is a potent factor in nearly every phase of national and social happiness. So real is its intrinsic worth that both peasant and monarch have an intuitive perception of its preciousness. This quality of desirableness has appropriated to money, or, in other words, to the gold and silver coin of the realm, an appearance of financial omnipotence that is foreign to its nature. The charm of money is so seductive in its influence upon the mind that the right place in economic science, and the true power and authority to be assigned to gold, is hard to determine with a practical certainty and universal assent, though easy of theoretic explication. If this enigma did not exist we should not have the present diversity of opinion upon the momentous question of currency. It is at first sight astonishing to observe that there is not a unanimity of judgment upon so fundamental a matter; but perhaps the secret of the opposing views of able and expert financial authorities springs from a habit of looking upon monetary problems in a merely local and incomplete aspect under the influence of interested motives unconsciously exercised, and without having a due regard to the first principles of political economy. In all mathematical studies, however complicated and profound, a frequent use of the first four rules of arithmetic is not only desirable, but absolutely imperative. Yet, because in purely mental processes and argumentative disquisitions, there is no binding necessity for the constant application of primary maxims of established accuracy and universally received authority, their value is sometimes overlooked, and questions which are remarkably simple when viewed in the light of common facts are thus allowed to get into almost inextricable confusion. Were it not for this tendency to disregard trifling arguments we should have no excuse for pointing out that money in itself is not the ultimate essence of wealth, but only a valuable medium and powerful agent for the dispersion and acquisition of property. The riches of the world are embedded in the muscles of its men, and a nation can only be wealthy and powerful in comparison with other nations to the extent that it holds the means of utilising the full development and constant employment of its own muscular resources, and also exercises its privilege of controlling and appropriating in some shape or form the energy of other peoples. Our meaning will be made more apparent by referring to a lamentable incident connected with the close of the last Franco-Prussian war. When France was at the feet of her conquerors, her sons slain, in hospital, or in bonds, her land impoverished and waste, she was suddenly called upon to pay an immense war indemnity, which denuded the country of a vast quantity of coined money. The friends of the French people looked upon the huge payment with sorrow and apprehension, fearful that the land would be terribly and permanently impoverished; but, to the surprise of all, no sooner was the enormous demand paid and the country freed from its invaders and restored to the advantages of peace than enterprise and business revived, and quickly recovered their accustomed proportions, and the land rapidly became once more the home of a great people. Germany, when endeavouring to inflict a permanent embarrassment upon her prostrate foe, by withdrawing a large portion of the currency, overlooked the fundamental axiom that gold is but a symbol of value, and only one particular kind of wealth, and forgot that so long as the resources of a nation, consisting of its bone and sinew and muscle, are preserved to it inviolate, the mainspring of happiness and prosperity is untouched. Thus France, with a vivacity characteristic of her sons, by merely exercising her latent muscular energy, could make small trouble of the loss of her money, for the true source and essence of her wealth remained intact. A contrast to this picture of rapidly revived prosperity is seen by noticing how the ancient conquerors transported into captivity their vanquished foes, and employed them permanently in ministering to their luxury, in fighting their battles, erecting their fortified cities, and cultivating the soil. Thus, if we look at the question in its true aspect, and keep vividly before our minds the universal subservience of money to labour, and clearly appreciate the fundamental truth that the proper use of a nation's muscular development is the only real source of luxury and power, we may be able to trace the effect that a depreciated currency has upon the prosperity of an Empire or its appendages.

Mr. H. REILY, Joint Manager of the Burdwan Raj Estates, shortly goes. It is proposed to appoint a Covenanted Civilian, sole manager, on a salary of Rs. 2,000 per month, with a house and horses. Rai Bahadur Bun Behary Kapur will under this arrangement be made guardian of the Maharajah, but will have no hand in the management.

SIR BRADFORD LESLIE, Agent of the East India Railway, shortly proceeds on leave to England. He will probably sever his connection with the company, in which case the selection of Mr. D. W. Campbell, C.I.E., for the Agency will be an excellent one, and will be received with general satisfaction. Mr. Campbell has frequently acted as Agent, and as an opportunity will soon occur for a permanent appointment to the post it is to be hoped that his claims will not be overlooked.

FOOD PRODUCTS.

EXTRACTS.

THE COMPANY'S EXTRACTS are manufactured on a new principle, which yields products of the very best quality.

"Normal" Food Extract is superior to most, if not all, other Meat Extracts, owing to its richness in stimulating and restorative properties. It contains, as shown by analysis, less ash and water, and more substances soluble in alcohol, and more nitrogenous compounds than the best known Extracts.

" 1/4 " ...	8/- " ...	24/- "
" 2 oz. Jars ...	9/- " ...	18/6 "

"Normal" Vegetable Extract is a pure Extract of Fresh Vegetables. It imparts an agreeable flavour to Soups, Sauces, Stews, Gravies, Meat-Jellies, &c., while its stimulating properties are analogous to those of Meat Extract, making it a valuable addition to all diets and all but indispensable to Vegetarians.

BROAD ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1823.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.,
13 WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 19th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1886.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourner there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

J. T. DAVENPORT, 35, Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE PALLIATIVE IN

NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 28, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 11th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 9th March; and from Calcutta to the 8th March.

A GOOD deal of uncertainty exists regarding the attitude of the Wuntho Tsebwa, some accounts stating that he has decided to acknowledge British supremacy, and in proof of his sincerity has paid the first instalment of an annual tribute of Rs. 30,000, while others as positively state that he refuses to submit, and that a strong force is being despatched from Mandalay to Wuntho.

SEVERAL dacoit gatherings are reported. Some encounters have occurred, the enemy being routed with heavy loss.

THE dacoits have attacked the treasury at Kankamee, on the frontier of the Amherst district, looting Rs. 12,000 of Government revenue.

IT is officially reported that large numbers of Shans come freely to the Bhamo to trade.

THE Rangoon import trade is said to be improving for the past few days, the town has been crowded with Burmans, Shans, and Karens from the jungle, who have come for trading purposes.

DURING the past fortnight great strides have been made in recruiting for the new police battalions for Upper Burma. The Punjab Levy is actually 1,450 strong, or 450 over the number, for as recruits were offering so readily it was resolved not to refuse them.

THE Lucknow battalion was 890, and the Allahabad battalion 900 strong on the 4th inst., and both should be up to full strength certainly by the middle of the month.

IT has been decided by the Home authorities that a medal will be given to all troops engaged in Upper Burma up to the 1st April next, and to such further date as the Government of India may consider advisable. The Field Force will probably not be broken up as such for some months to come.

THE Government has appointed a strong committee to deal with the question of building sites in Bombay.

LIEUT.-GENERAL HANCOCK, Director-General of Railways, died from liver disease at Calcutta on March 9th.

A DETACHMENT of the 3rd Bombay Light Infantry has arrived at Poona from Mallegaon. All the men were seriously ill, and some have died. Death is attributed to the effects of poison.

THE Ahmedabad Municipality have passed a new water scheme—to supply ten gallons per head per diem at an estimated cost of Rs. 600,000.

THE office of Inspector of Factories has been abolished, and Mr. Jones, the present incumbent, has tendered his resignation. His duties in the Presidency town will be performed by the Assistant Collector, and in the mofussil by the several collectors.

MR. E. J. SIMINSON will act for Mr. Rawlins as Accountant-General of Bombay, when the latter goes on furlough.

THE labours of the Public Service Commission have been, as far as regards the taking of evidence, brought to a close.

IT is understood that no attempt will be made to bring out the report of the Public Service Commission in the brief period that now remains before Sir Charles Aitchison leaves on his holiday; the probability being that when the bulk of the Calcutta evidence has been taken the Commission will for the present dissolve, two or three of its members devoting themselves to certain subsidiary investigations.

IT is stated that the report of the Finance Committee is not likely to be made public at present, if even hereafter. Strictly speaking, there is no report. As the various sub-committees through which the work was done formulated each result of their inquiries it was sent up to Government, and these results gathered, accompanied by a memorandum from the President, Sir Charles Elliott, constitute the only present record of the Committee's labours.

COLONEL WALTER acts for Sir Edward Bradford when the latter leaves the Rajputana Agency, but it is understood that the permanent appointment will not fall vacant till the new Political Secretary actually joins at the India Office, and that no substantive nomination therefore will be made yet.

AS at present arranged, Sir Charles Aitchison will make over the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab to Mr. J. B. Lyall on the 2nd of April, at Delhi, and be sworn a member of the Viceroy's Executive Council on the same day.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN takes a year's furlough shortly.

IT is understood that whatever may be Sir Charles Elliott's future official destiny he will not return to the Chief Commissionership of Assam.

LATE news from Khatmandu shows the authorities there believe that the alleged plot by Ranbir Jung was something very like an invention. Further inquiries are being made, but nothing is said about arrests in Khatmandu itself.

IT is anticipated that the telegraph line will be completed to Bhamo by the end of this month. The men employed in its construction have come upon frequent traces of a former line, the work of the late dynasty, which appears to have been ruined mainly by wild beasts.

THE following notification appears in the Gazette of India:—His Excellency the Governor-General in Council having had under consideration the expediency of combining, under the management, the various railways serving Northern and Eastern Bengal, and having their terminus in Calcutta, and being of opinion that it will be advantageous on financial grounds, and also to the interests of commerce and the public generally, that the trade routes to Calcutta from the directions named should be placed under a single administration, is pleased to order that, from the 1st of April next, the control of the Eastern Bengal State Railway, and of the railways worked by it, shall vest in the Government of Bengal. On that date, therefore, the general control and management of those lines, and of the staff employed thereon will, with the consent of his honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, which has been obtained, be transferred from under the administration of the Director-General of Railways to that of the Government of Bengal.

SUPERSESSION OF COLONEL PEMBERTON IN THE BURMA COMMISSION.—A memorial by Colonel W. W. Pemberton to the Viceroy on the treatment he has received at the hands of Government has been published in the Rangoon Gazette. Colonel Pemberton points out that he has been twenty-seven years in the Commission, and that he ranks next below the present officiating Commissioner of Arrakan. That on his return from furlough in January, 1886, he was posted to the Thongwa district, where he says he succeeded in repressing a rebellion in its incipient stage. That in March, on the lamented death of Mr. St. Barbe, he was transferred to Bassein where dacoit gangs were harassing the country, burning houses and murdering peaceable villagers; that members were shot, whilst the rest were either arrested or dispersed. That he assumed charge of one of the most important districts in the province under most disadvantageous circumstances, and yet managed to quiet it down and to get in the revenue without loss. That he hoped, being on the spot, that a temporary vacancy in the list of Commissioners would fall to him; but that he finds he has been sent to the out-station of Tavoy, and a junior officer has been appointed to the vacancy. He complains he cannot get the reasons for his supersession, and asks for full inquiry.

Notes of the Week.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN'S financial statement will hardly be received as satisfactory. His accounts certainly show a nominal surplus, in the revised estimates for 1886-87, of revenue over expenditure of £500, but this result has been arrived at by the suspension of the Famine Insurance fund of £1,500,000. This process of drawing out the revenue is very like that adopted by the Irishman to lengthen his blanket by cutting a piece from the bottom and patching it on to the top. There is in the Indian Budget just presented an actual deficit now, which threatens to be larger during the coming year.

In two years there has been an increase in expenditure over revenue of two-and-a-quarter millions sterling. The total debt of India, which ten years ago was £130,000,000, is now above £174,000,000. Allowing for exceptional trials during the past two years, for loss by exchange, for the Burmese campaigns, and the enhanced military expenditure, it cannot be denied that the financial position to-day is a grave one. The forced suspension of the Famine Insurance Fund is a serious matter, and the news that the Indian railway system has been a heavy net loss to the State is an unpleasant surprise. The revenues of India are always said to be "elastic," but it is evident that taxation cannot be increased, and that economy in all departments must be the order of the day.

THERE is one satisfactory item of intelligence in the Budget telegram from Calcutta, the significance of which will be easily understood. The Gwalior Council of Regency desires to invest 3½ crores of rupees of the treasure hoarded by the late Maharaja Scindia in Government securities. If other Native States will follow this example, and the fact becomes known throughout India, there will be a strengthening of British rule equal to many battalions, and the Russophobists need not be alarmed if the knowledge spreads to St. Petersburg. The more Native money that there is in the British treasuries in India the greater certainly may be the desire of our Muscovite friends to visit that country. But where the people's treasure is there will their hearts (and hands to defend it) be also.

THE many friends Mr. Bourke left behind him at home when he went to India to assume the troubled administration of Madras will be glad to hear that he has already won his way into the confidence and esteem of all classes of the community in that Presidency. The local Press is unanimous upon this point, saying that if he goes on as he has begun Madras will have good reason to congratulate herself upon his rule as a Governor and administrator, and that when the day of his departure arrives he will leave beloved and respected by all. We have said that his Excellency's many friends will be pleased with—but none who know the genial brother of the great Lord Mayo will be surprised at—this encomium.

A NATIVE editor expresses a hope which may possibly be re-echoed in this country. It is that Mr. Lalmohun Ghose should stay in India altogether. "His talents would be of far greater service in organising and educating his own countrymen than in the vain task of trying to influence case-hardened Englishmen who know what they are about better than anybody could teach them." So say all of us—and nobody will deny that Mr. Lalmohun G. will do wisely if he acts upon his countryman's advice.

EARL GREY, in a letter to Mr. Dacosta, acknowledging the receipt of his pamphlet on Indian finance says:—"I believe that by creating the means of rapidly moving an overwhelming force to any point of our frontiers we have an assurance of being able speedily to destroy any hostile force that might be brought against us, and that if the money which has been spent in needless wars had on the contrary been used in making railways along our frontiers, with two or three fortified forts, where a force could be assembled in readiness to attack any enemy as soon as he appeared on our frontiers, perfect security would have been maintained against any attack that could possibly have been made on our dominion, either by Russian troops or by Asiatics, and directed by Russians. Mr. Gladstone, by his language after the Russian attack on Penjdeh, and then allowing the Russians to retain all they had gained, has contributed to encourage among the people of India a belief in the power of Russia, and in its being an object of dread to ourselves."

A REPORT which had gone abroad that the Indian troopships were to be forthwith abolished has produced an official contradiction, although rumour still has it that the abolition must come sooner or later on the grounds of economy. In the meantime the official statement is to the effect that no fundamental alteration is contemplated, and that the programme for the ensuing trooping season will be carried out by the Serapis, Orocodile, Euphrates, and Malabar. The India Office had called for a comparative statement of the cost per head in conveying troops between Portsmouth and Bombay, as is invariably done at the end of the trooping season, and does not imply any dissatisfaction with the existing system. The Sumna, which is the only ship of the trooping fleet whose engines have not been compounded, will be removed from the roster, as she stands greatly in need of new machinery and repairs, and, as the Indian Government have declined to incur the necessary expense, it is understood that she will be handed over to the Indian Government exactly as she stands for the purposes of local transport.

THE officers, clerks, and other subordinates of the Bombay Municipality had their own ideas of how the Jubilee ought to have been celebrated. They presented a Memorial to the Commissioner, praying "that in order to perpetuate the remembrance of the Jubilee of the Queen-Empress's reign, either a month's salary be presented to them, or a year added to the period of their service, or the Income-tax paid by the Municipality instead of its being deducted out of their salaries, or that for one year they may be exempted from the payment of their contribution to their pension fund." That is all!

THE result of the Public Service Commission threatens to be very similar to the result of the labour of the mountain in the ancient fable. Amidst such a conflict of opinions as those expressed by Bengali Babis, Parsi merchants, Mahomedan landowners, and English officials, traders, and planters, the members of the Commission may well be bewildered. Mr. Hudson, the representative of the planting community, declares that the mass of evidence has been taken from Government servants, or those aspiring to be Government servants, and that the views of the governed are entirely unrepresented. Sir Lepel Griffin, in his excellent article in the Asiatic Quarterly Review, which we notice in our leader of to-day, says much the same thing. Mr. Hudson advises that the submission of the Report be postponed. He need not be anxious; it must already be of such a magnitude that ordinary life would be too short to master it. It will be presented and—shelved.

A GOOD suggestion comes from one of the army of India to the effect that as a Jubilee gift to her soldiers Her Most Gracious Majesty might restore to her regiments their old numbers instead of the present cumbersome territorial designations. This, it is said, would be an act of pity and compassion upon the Native officers and men who are trying in vain to master the said territorial titles. Some examples of the difficulty complained of are given. "The East Surrey Regiment," for instance, comes out in Native tongue after this style, "Ester Issary Ka Pultan," and "The Duke of Cambridge's Own Middlesex Regiment" as (after considerable effort) "Juik arf Kambridge's Ka Own Middle-i-sex Ka Pultan." The writer adds that when "The Princess Louise's Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders" go to India the Native rendering' of the title will be "difficult to describe and awful to contemplate."

THERE can be no question, says the Army and Navy Gazette, but that we should get our Indian trooping work done at an average of fifteen knots instead of eleven for something like two-thirds the present cost. The saving in office staff and clerical labour would of itself be very considerable, as the services of many highly-paid officials would at once be dispensed with. Of course, the change would be most unwelcome to them, as also to many naval officers to whom "trooping" means pleasant times; but we venture to think we do not so expensively and scientifically train these latter with a view to their abilities being wasted in mere passenger ships. No doubt the Portsmouth tradesmen would wail and lament, for every arrival and departure of an Indian trooper has been a little goldmine to them, and the military themselves are not likely to be carried in such almost luxuriant comfort under any other system. Still, all these interests should give way to the public good, and if superior efficiency and economy can be attained by the abolition of the Indian troopships, why, they must go.

THE Rangoon Times offers an excellent suggestion regarding the utilisation of the ranges of hills in Upper Burma as military headquarters:—"The question of making hill-stations the permanent headquarters of British garrisons in tropical countries has often been discussed, and its advantages in giving us a healthy and acclimatised army are undoubted. We are now occupying Upper Burma, a country with ranges of hills varying from 4,000 to 6,000 ft. above the level of the sea, available as a sanitarium for troops. Surely this is a splendid opportunity for trying the hill headquarter system. It would overcome that terrible objection to Burma—its unhealthiness; and from being a country to be avoided it would become a favourite resort, and lose its old reproach—that if you have a weak point, it finds it out, and if you have not, it makes one. On the score of health there is no doubt that Upper Burma at least is a thoroughly unhealthy, feverish climate, and will continue to be so for many years to come. Now, if you go 4,000 or 6,000 ft. up you are out of all these evils, and get into a very decent climate indeed. If large hill-stations are instituted as the headquarters of the troops garrisoning Upper Burma, in such positions as to be easily accessible from their respective tracts of low country, the bulk of the men might be always in a good climate, while detachments would garrison the posts in the plains, and would be relieved by fresh troops from headquarters at periodical intervals."

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 27.

On Thursday a large gathering of Europeans and natives presented farewell addresses to Sir C. Aitchison, the retiring Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, at Lahore. Among the benefits enumerated as having been conferred on the province during his rule, were the spread of education, the introduction of local self-government, and the scheme for extending medical aid to the women of India. Sir C. Aitchison, replying, said they were living in a time of transition. The old order was changing and giving place to the new. It was a sign of life and growth that the direction which things might take could not fail to be influenced by the views of the educated native community; and while it was the duty of every person in high office to keep the service open to the legitimate influence of enlightened public opinion, it was equally incumbent on the Natives, if they would play a useful part, to keep in sympathy with their rulers, so as to understand and not misjudge their efforts for the public good. The British Government, whatever its faults or shortcomings, was still the best Government India had ever seen. He concluded by bidding his audience farewell, and saying that he was glad to think that he left the province in profound peace, even on its remotest borders.

The Governor of Madras, addressing a meeting of the Central Jubilee Committee on Thursday, stated that 156 local committees in that presidency had joined in the Jubilee address, and upwards of 100 memorials of a permanent nature were being established in various towns. The celebrations of the Jubilee in Southern India were, he said, a good example to the governed as well as to the Government, and a proof that the people were most loyal and devoted to their Sovereign.

A number of influential Mahomedan noblemen and gentlemen waited on the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal on Thursday and presented an address, thanking him for his successful endeavours to improve Mahomedan education, and restore that community to the place which it should never have lost. Sir A. R. Thompson said that he hoped a new era was opening in the cause of Mahomedan progress and fitness for public service.

The statistical department of the Indian Government founded some years ago, mainly for the purpose of collecting information for the Imperial Gazetteer, has now been dissolved. Sir William Hunter, its late director, is to leave Bombay for England on Friday.

It is stated that Holkar will visit England this year, sailing next month. Sir Lepel Griffin will probably accompany him. This will be the first occasion on which one of the greater chiefs will have visited England.

AFGHANISTAN.

Although a week has passed since the Nauroz festival nothing has been heard of the threatened revival of the Ghilzai insurrection. It is, therefore, possible that the necessity for the harvest operations may postpone the rising. This is, however, very doubtful, and all accounts agree that the situation is a precarious one. It is stated that many Ghilzais who have been trading in Peshawur for some months have suddenly left for their own country, and beyond doubt there is a feeling of restless activity and excitement among the tribe. The Ameer's exactions continue to be the cause of general complaints, and he is said to be thoroughly unpopular. Many persons whose opinions are entitled to the highest respect hold that if the Ghilzais rise and meet with any success the revolt will spread throughout the country, and speedily bring about the Ameer's complete overthrow.

BELOOCHISTAN.

The Duke of Connaught with his staff, General Tanner, commanding in Beloochistan, and Mr. Bruce, Political Agent, arrived on Thursday at Loralai, the new cantonment in the Bori Valley. A parade of the troops was held on Friday. Many Sirdars and the leading chiefs of all the Zhob and Bori tribes were present to pay their respects to the Duke.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 27.

General White returned to Mandalay yesterday from Woontho. General Arbuthnot will leave on the 31st for a tour of inspection at Bhamo and the up-country posts. Mr. Crosthwaite has taken steps to remedy the Chinese grievances in Upper Burma. On the 24th inst. he received at the palace a large deputation of the Chinese residents of Mandalay. Mr. Warry, of the Chinese Consular service (now on special duty in Upper Burma), who had previously inquired into Chinese grievances, was present. After hearing the statements of the members of the deputation Mr. Crosthwaite announced that he would meet their views by collecting the jade-duty at Magoung, and by recognising to the full extent the leases of the india-rubber forests made by the Burmese Government to the Chinese. Other questions regarding opium, &c., he promised to consider. Mr. Crosthwaite's action has had a good effect on the Chinese.

Another recent decision of Mr. Crosthwaite has given great satisfaction to the merchants and others interested in Upper Burma and to the mercantile community of Rangoon. The Indian Limitation Act has been recently suddenly introduced into Upper Burma. The local Courts held that, owing to the wording of the enactment bringing the Limitation Act into force, the time must be taken to have run prior to the annexation of Upper Burma. Under Burmese law ten years was the shortest period of limitation. This sudden change of the law resulted in the cancelling of about three-fourths of all debts owing in Upper Burma, and would have entailed enormous loss on the merchants and completely disorganised trade. Mr. Crosthwaite, on the 25th inst., promised a deputation of traders to move the Government of India to defer the operation of the Limitation Act. Sir C. Bernard had previously refused similar requests. These judicious measures of Mr. Crosthwaite are certain to have the beneficial effect of reviving the trade of Upper Burma, which has been in a very depressed condition.

LATER

Mr. Crosthwaite will leave for the Ruby Mines on the 29th inst. to investigate on the spot the questions connected with the miners' rights.

Mr. Burgess has returned to Mandalay from Woontho. Until the revenue is paid in full by the Woontho Tsawbwa Kawlin Woontho will be permanently held in force. Other posts will also be held in Katha, north of Woontho. The revenue, although coming in fairly, will be short of the estimate, as certain districts are deserted, owing to ravages by Dacoits.

Mr. Crosthwaite is taking measures to bring water into Mandalay as a precaution against fires, and to establish a municipality. The Burmans and Sikhs are found to get on well together in the police force. The Burmans are unwilling to enlist, disliking any long engagements. A fair number of Burmans and Shans, however, is being recruited at Mandalay for the police force. Mr. Crosthwaite shares General Roberts's opinion as to the great want of an organised Burmese police force.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

CALCUTTA, MARCH 25.

The annual financial statement of the Indian Government for 1887-88 is published in the Gazette to-night, in the form of a minute by Sir Auckland Colvin, Financial Member of the Viceroy's Council. The accounts for 1885-86 show that the revenue amounted to £74,464,197, and the expenditure to £77,265,923, leaving a deficit of £2,801,726. The deficit, according to the revised estimates as stated in the financial statement last year, was expected to be £2,890,800. It is explained that in the revised estimates for 1886-87 and in the estimates for 1887-88 the deficit which would otherwise have occurred has been met by the transfer to loan account of charges otherwise debitable to revenue under the head of famine insurance. The revised estimates for 1886-87 thus show a total revenue of £76,071,700, and expenditure £76,071,200, leaving a surplus of £500. The revenue for the year 1887-88 is estimated at £77,460,200, and the expenditure at £77,443,500, showing an estimated surplus of £16,700. In the former of these two years there was included the excess of expenditure on account of the military operations in Burma, which amounted to £860,000, while the Civil Estimates for Upper Burma were increased by £280,300, mainly on account of the police charge. The account for exchange also was increased by £474,600. The increase in revenue shown in the revised estimates was £273,000 above the figure shown in the Budget estimates of 1887-88. The net charge in the estimates for Upper Burma, after deduction of the revenue expected from the province, amounts to £1,770,500, of which £720,000 are extra army charges and £66,000 marine charges. An additional sum of £344,984 is included in the estimates of 1887-88 on account of the permanent increase to the strength of the army. The net increase in the expenditure over the revenue in the two years is £1,048,900 and £1,231,300 respectively. This has been rather more than covered in each case by the transfer to loan account of equivalent amounts hitherto charged under the head of the famine insurance grant. The additions to the Imperial revenue resulting from the revision of the provincial contracts is £640,100, but credit is taken for £490,000 only in the estimates of the ensuing year, as the balance will not be available in 1887-88.

The minute next reviews at length the past history of the recent realisation of Indian finance, in order to prove that the reductions made by the Government on the present occasion in the assignment of revenue for provincial expenditure has been in accordance with the practice of former years. A comparison with past accounts of the assignments now made for provincial expenditure shows that the retrenchment effected in the provincial expenditure is mostly in the case of original public works. The recommendations of the Finance Committee in directions other than provincial finance cover a very wide field, and will for some time continue to occupy the attention of the Government. The minute proceeds to explain the grounds on which the Famine Insurance grant has been suspended. It points out that since 1877 when the famine insurance scheme was introduced 5,554 miles of railway have been completed or put into active construction, and that over £6,000,000 have been contributed towards the prosecution of these railways from the Famine Insurance grant. The yield from the income tax in the revised estimates for 1886-87 is £1,348,100 against £1,458,100 in the Budget for that year, the difference being mainly due to the decision to assess the tax on the surplus profits of the guaranteed railways, and not on the net earnings. As, however, the share of the Government in the tax on the net earnings of the guaranteed and State railways is £131,980, the loss on account of the tax is merely nominal. The estimate for next year on account of the tax is £1,406,000. The net loss to the State on the State and guaranteed railways as shown in the revised estimates for 1886-87 amounts to £1,177,900, and in the Budget for 1887-88 is estimated at £1,363,700, the increased net loss being mainly due to the heavy renewals required on the former Sindh, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, and to the interest due on a large amount of capital representing the unopened line.

The army estimates for 1887-88, including the sum required for the troops in Burma, amount to £19,197,000 against £19,070,600 in the revised estimates of the preceding year. Of this sum £344,984 are included in the estimates as an increased payment on account of additions to the strength of the army.

The prospects of the opium revenue are good, but as they are not so exceptional as last year, the payment on account of opium had been reduced from £2,785,300 in the revised estimates to £2,506,100 in the Budget estimates for next year. The reserve at the close of 1887 is expected to stand at £36,705. The price during the ensuing year has been taken at Rs. 1,100 per chest, and 4,750 chests will be sold monthly during the current year. The amount to be sold in the first three months of 1888 will be notified hereafter.

The additional charge in the revised estimates for 1886-87 on account of exchange amounts to £474,600. The rate of exchange for 1887-88 has been taken at 1s. 5½d.

The consumption of salt during the eleven months ending January 31, 1887, increased by 941,000 maunds. The imports of both gold and silver have decreased, the former having fallen to £13,584,360 for ten months of 1886-87 as compared with £27,629,347 in the twelve months of 1885-86, £46,719,365 in the twelve months of 1884-85, and £54,625,061 in the twelve months of 1883-84.

The minute proceeds to state that the District and Post Office Savings Banks have been joined. The total balances in savings banks of all classes on March 31, 1886, amounted to £5,081,183. The Post Office Life Insurance scheme is making progress. The opening balance for 1887-88 in India is expected to be Rs. 1,301,657,811, and the closing balance Rs. 1,110,460,078. Provision has been made for drawings by the Secretary to the amount of £16,250,000 true sterling.

The annual loan for public works will amount to 5½ crores of rupees, and will be raised in India. Of this amount 3½ crores will be obtained by the investment in Government Securities, at the desire of the Gwalior Council of Regency, of the treasure hoarded by the late Maharajah Scindia. No public works sterling loan will be raised this year.

THE Earl and Countess of Aberdeen arrived in Madras on the 1st instant on a visit to the Right Hon. the Governor and Lady Susan Bourke, C.I. They were to have left on Wednesday for Ceylon, where they will stay with Lord Aberdeen's uncle, the Hon. Sir Arthur Gordon, G.C.M.G., Governor of that colony. From Ceylon they will go to Australia, and thence return to England.

A MADRAS paper hears that Mr. R. F. Chisholm has appealed to the Government of India, pointing out that his premature retirement from the Public Works Department, Madras, as Consulting Architect, was induced by his having been superseded by his junior; and expressing his willingness now to take up his post again, provided he is raised to the rank of Superintending Engineer, a rank he is entitled to by service. No decision has been as yet arrived at.

RHEA FIBRE.—The Indian Agriculturist says:—"Many of our readers will be glad to learn that Mr. Charles Maries, of the Durbhunga Raj, has solved the Rhea fibre problem. Mr. Maries has discovered a process by which he can decorticate the fibre in the green state with extraordinary facility, after which he works it up to the required standard under his new process. We have seen some of this fibre, and can state with certainty that we have seldom seen Rhea fibre to equal Mr. Maries' specimens. It retains all its strength of tension, while the floss is as soft as silk. Mr. Maries, we understand, has shown his fibre to some of our large Calcutta merchants who deal in fibres, and their opinion is a very favourable one indeed. We congratulate Mr. Maries on his discovery, which ought to prove a perfect "mine of wealth" to him. Any one wishing for further particulars should address himself to Mr. Charles Maries, Durbhunga."

THE BANGALORE SHOOTING SCANDAL.—A Military Board has been appointed to investigate the irregularities said to have taken place at the local firing in connection with the W. I. R. A. Meeting. The Board, consisting of Colonel Hamilton, R.E., Major Douglas, G. I. and Major Leonard, B. R. V., commenced its sitting to-day. The inquiry was held, as all military ones are, with closed doors. The object, it would appear, of the inquiry is to exonerate the competitors. Lieutenant Ensor, the Adjutant of the B. R. V., was the first witness called, and he stated that he was the local secretary to the meeting. On taking count of the scores, he checked the targets and found the number of bull's-eyes on the first-class targets were less by about twenty than those on the register. He communicated the matter to the honorary secretary at Poona, and informed him of the facts. At the same time he mentioned that it would be unfair to the competitors to allow things to stand as they were, and therefore asked that the matches should be fired over again. The honorary secretary refused, and disqualified the meeting. Mr. Ensor then wrote asking for an investigation, and received a refusal to this request also on the 27th inst. The board of inquiry was then constituted by the military authorities. Captain Leonard and Lieutenant Smith and some of the other competitors gave evidence; also a Naique of the Sappers, who acted as marker at the meeting. Captain Pratt was not present, as he is away at present from Bangalore. A marker who was in the service of the Madras Railway Company, and who marked at the meeting, has been sought for, but he has not been found yet. The police have been requested to look for him. The inquiry is proceeding.—Bangalore Post.

THE PLAN OF COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.

(Madras Mail.)

Although the much-abused system of competitive examination for entrance into almost all the Departments of the public service has triumphed for thirty years, it may not be uninteresting to examine the effect of the present working of that system on the minds of the men who undergo it. We are now, for the first time, seeing the effect of competitive examinations in the highest ranks of the India bureaucracy. Sir Charles Aitchison, the retiring Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and Mr. Cordery, the Resident at Hyderabad, both passed high in the first batch of Competition Wallahs, and few more distinguished men could be found in modern days in the Civil Service of India. But the examination that they passed differed greatly from that now set, and we doubt whether the change is for the better. The object of competitive examinations is to test the real knowledge of the candidates and not the amount of superficial knowledge they may happen to have "crammed" for the particular occasion. It is, of course, very difficult to obtain the real measure of the candidate's knowledge, and, probably, the rise in the general average has caused the examiners to set the extraordinarily difficult questions they have given in recent years. But, although it is freely acknowledged that a knowledge of Latin and Chemistry may be useful to a man who has to perform the multifarious duties of a Collector of a District, yet it does not seem that questions on obscure poets, and the subtle differences of the "ethyl group"—are of any practical value. The praises of Latin as an exercise in mental gymnastics have been sung over and over again. Its value in enabling the student to acquire the modern Romance languages is also obvious, and the modern craze for only useful knowledge,—knowledge that will "gain marks" is much to be deprecated. The examination should deal more with the literature of a language than with its purely grammatical features. A language is only useful as a means of acquiring a knowledge of a country's literature and history; any test tending to other ends than these is useless, except the colloquial.

The Civil Service Commissioners have in their hands the only power of examining for the public service that exists in England, and it is to their wise and prudent use of that power that we look for any required improvements. No one denies, we suppose, that it is far easier to examine the mere book knowledge of a candidate than the real depth of his study on any subject. To avoid the possibility of passing through mere cramming should be the aim of every examiner, and for this purpose a few improvements might be made in the plan of examination. For instance, in examining in a language, no books should be fixed beforehand for translation, though the works of any particular author may be named as the pivot of the literary part of the test. A large number of alternative passages should be set to enable the candidate to select those which are from the works of authors he has studied, and certain passages should call for a free, and others for a critical translation. For example, in an examination in Latin prose, two passages from Tacitus, two from Pliny, and two from Cicero might be set, and the candidate might be directed to translate any two passages, not being both from the same author, and to state which he selected for "free," and which for critical translation. Modern languages might be similarly treated as to their literature, but the viva voce test should rank very high in these, and should include not only conversation on several subjects, but also translating at sight from fairly easy authors. This colloquial should rank with the written examination, and should occupy at least an hour, instead of the ten minutes usually allotted to it; manuscript should also be given to be read at the viva voce, but in this case only the general meaning should be asked for. All passages should, as far as is compatible with their being selected from standard authors, have some reference to the service for which the candidate is being examined. It is very doubtful whether the languages usually selected are those most suitable to form a groundwork for future learning. Probably a thorough knowledge of Latin and Persian would form the best basis for one who was intended to be a traveller, or whose work would have much connection with foreign countries. French, Spanish, &c., are quickly learnt by one who is well acquainted with Latin, while Persian forms the basis of many Eastern tongues, and will generally take the traveller anywhere, as most men with any pretence to education in Asia know something of Persian. In Mathematics and Science questions should be asked rather with a view to ascertaining a candidate's knowledge of general principles than to catch him tripping; while the viva voce questions in Science should dwell more on the appearance of various chemicals and the use of simple apparatus than on matters which could be answered as well, or better, on paper. A beginner is not required to know the latest writings on abstruse points, but the principles underlying the study in question, as exemplified in a few fairly easy, but searching questions.

It might also be a great assistance to commercial firms, and to aspirants for appointments in such, if examinations could be held twice a year by the Civil Service Commissioners in Languages,

Mathematics, and Science, and a certificate given to each candidate showing his degree of proficiency in the various subjects. Such a certificate would be a guarantee of efficiency, which the leading firms would, probably, after a few years, demand from all those who desired to enter their offices. Undoubtedly something must be done to revive British trade, which, according to the Report of the Royal Commission on the depression of trade, is declining on account of the superior adaptability of the German firms to the wants of their customers, and to the inferior technical knowledge exhibited by the English employes, as well as to their ignorance of foreign languages. When an English firm sends an agent to Austria who does not speak the language of the country, what wonder that their trade is snatched from them by a German Jew who could make himself understood by the smallest retail tradesman. Although the examinations referred to would not be competitive, as there would be no appointments to compete for, yet they would probably be more thorough than any test that could be applied by a private firm, and their freedom and generality would make them strictly comparative. If the result of each examination could be learnt on payment of a small fee, employers of high-class labour could gauge the relative knowledge of any applicant, and would employ him with full confidence in his capabilities. Possibly the idea is crude, but it is the basis of a practicable scheme, and the only way in which a distinct standing could be obtained by applicants for business employment.

BEER IN INDIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Whether it is good for the liver or otherwise, Private Thomas Atkins drinks a good deal of beer in this country—through the hot weather as well as through the cold. On occasion he can dispose of a gallon, be none the worse for it, and perfectly ready for more liquor a few hours later. He believes, rightly or wrongly, that there is no harm in beer; and has been known, on sweltering June nights, to put a chatty-full by his cot-side to drink before morning. Temperance-chaplains notwithstanding, Thomas will drink till the end of the British army. His yearly wants in bulk rose long ago to the dignity of an Imperial question; and as such, have come under the consideration of the Finance committee. In the darkness that shrouded the operations of these economical gentlemen, they stumbled upon a great and notable saving—or to be more accurate, the saving was thrust upon their attention from without by a Syndicate of all the Indian Breweries, ably represented by Mr. H. Whympere, of the Murree Brewery Company. What the Syndicate took care to point out was that a five-year contract needs just as permanent a brewery and as heavy an outlay as a fifty-year contract; that the Government demand was the main prop of an Indian establishment, and if that was assured, for say ten years, breweries all round could afford to lower their prices and spread their profits over a longer term of years. Indian brewed beer is in any case cheaper than the English article; and with the machinery now in use, just as good. The price could be still further lowered if all the Bengal orders—and they are large ones—were put into the hands of the Syndicate. There was no "ring" principle involved; as there were no existing firms standing out of the agreement. "Give us a ten-year settlement, and we will fill the canteens more cheaply" was the main contention. Eventually, and after a little volume of correspondence had taken its place on the Government files and Commissary-Generals had calculated the brewage and cartage of hogsheads, down to the uttermost decimal pie, the army, through its heads, decided to embrace Mr. Whympere's offer which was broadly—beer for fifty-two rupees a hogshead in the plains and fifty-four in the Hills, where it takes eight coolies and a large amount of bamboo and cord to sling one barrel. Calcutta, Dum-Dum and Barrackpore are not to be supplied, because the English beer is delivered there from the steamers direct. But to guard against financial contingencies an elaborate sliding scale has been prepared, whereby the cost of the beer fluctuates with the value of the rupee. The Indian brewer has a "big thing" in his hands, and must thank Mr. Whympere for it, inasmuch as that gentleman wrestled with the Finance Committee, the Commissaries and the Departments concerned for the contracts.

THE NATIVE ARMY.

(Pioneer.)

The Russian scare of 1885 had at least one good effect; its direct and immediate result was that attention was turned to the numerical weakness of the army in this country, to the want of railway communication on the North-West Frontier, and to the defenceless state of that frontier and of the seaboard of India. Since the memorable time of the Rawal Pindi Durbar and Panjdeh incident much has been to place the the armament of India on a sounder basis. An increase to the British and Native garrison was sanctioned by the home authorities to an extent which would practically give us 70,000 British and 140,000 Native troops all told; but up to the present time we have not got these full numbers. As regards the British garrison, a large proportion of the additional permanent strength has been given, and by the end of next trooping season the full complement will have been received. The increase to the Native Army has only been carried out in part, viz., the raising of two new mountain batteries, three new cavalry regiments, four second battalions of Gurkhas, and a fourth squadron for existing cavalry regiments. A further step, as we stated a few days ago, has now been taken, which will bring the strength up to that authorised in the summer of 1885. The 2nd Battalion of the 3rd Gurkhas is to be raised, another regiment of Muzbi Sikhs (Pioneers), and three class regiments of Sikh Infantry, while the Guides' Cavalry are to be increased by another squadron, making three in all. Roughly speaking, the increase will amount to something under 5,000 men. It is no new departure this raising of five new regiments, for the home authorities sanctioned the increase, as we have often said, nearly two years ago, the Indian Government being left to carry it out in their own time, with due regard to financial emergencies. The system of frontier strategic railways is nearly completed, so there will be no heavy budget charges on their account in the coming financial year. The occupation of Upper Burma has absorbed a good many regiments, and it is likely that the garrison of that country will have to be kept very strong for two or three years to come, so that it is well for the Government to raise the five Infantry regiments sanctioned with as little delay as possible. In connection with this increase of the Native Army, it may be well to clear away some misconceptions as to the arming of our Sepoys. We may state at the outset that both the Government of India and the Commander-in-Chief have taken as their guiding principle in this matter that the Sepoy shall be armed with exactly the same weapon as the British soldier, whether it be a Martini-Enfield, a repeater, or what not. The old idea of giving the Native an inferior weapon has been discarded absolutely; and the home authorities on their part are in accord with those in this country. But the difficulty is to discover what the Rifle shall be. Thus some two years ago it was proposed to give the sepoy the Martini-Henry, and some 40,000 rifles of that pattern were shipped out to India. Then the Martini-Enfield with its magazine attachment was declared in England to be the rifle, and its adoption was looked upon as assured. Now, the process of rearming some 190,000 men in India is one which must always spread over three or four years; and the Indian Government held that if a new arm was to be issued it had better be given to Europeans and Natives alike. It was, therefore, decided that the Martini-Enfield should be given to the whole army, and the issue of 40,000 Martini-Henrys to the sepoy was stopped. But now we are told that the Martini-Enfield has been rejected, and that a repeating rifle is to be the arm of the future. It is not known in India even if the pattern has been fixed, though it is said that a consignment may be sent out here before the end of the year. If this were done we should in the case of sudden war have our Indian army equipped with three different rifles, all taking different ammunition: a small proportion of the British troops might have the repeater, and the remainder the Martini-Henry, while the sepoy would still have the Snider. This would be a fatal mistake, for in the field serious complications would arise from our ammunition columns carrying and having to distribute three different kinds of cartridges. This being the case, and it being very problematical when the new repeating-rifle will be issued, it has been resolved to issue to the Native Army all the available Martini-Henrys. There are, as we have said, the 40,000 already lying in store, and moreover under a recent order the reserve has been fixed at 33 per cent. instead of 50 per cent. for those in use. This will give another 12,000 or more, and in fact the Martini-Henry can be given without any difficulty to 60,000 Native soldiers, which is about as many as we should put into the field in the case even of a great war. Care will, of course, be taken that such regiments are armed as are likely to be sent on service; but it must be understood that the Martini-Henry is only a stop-gap for the repeater which will eventually be given to the whole Army. We are so accustomed to delays on the part of the authorities at home in the matter of rifles that we fear it may be a long time before the repeating-rifle reaches India in any large numbers. Meanwhile, therefore, it is wise to give the sepoy as good a rifle as we have in such numbers as are available.

INDIAN CRIMINALS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

One of the "genteel" occupations of the English life-convict in an Indian jail is to prepare, from morning till night, blank forms to be filled in afterwards with tabular statements. In the silence of his painfully clean little room the "lifer" toils with rule and pen and lithographic ink only one degree less hopeless than Sisyphus, for he knows in one-and-twenty years he will be free. At first view it is hard to see what end he serves. But he is a link in the chain of a system; and ministers, indirectly, to the morbid craving of the Indian Government for statistics. The forms which he rules are filled in with figures and decimals bearing on every conceivable aspect of the prisoner, male and female, man or child, whipped or unwhipped; and the undigested whole is peptonised by "able and energetic" secretaries for the benefit of Her Majesty's subjects rot in prison.

Most reports are defiled with too many details, but the Jail reports are worst of all—interminable almost as the "lifer's" task, conceived apparently in the very wantonness of leisure, and filling the reader's mind with numbing despair.

The Report published in the last Gazette of India is a double-barrelled one; comprising the figures for 1884 and 1885, for the purposes of examination. It opens with the usual Provincial "whips," reminding men that reports must be sent in up to date—in that does the science of administration lie—or the interest in them is "seriously diminished." The interest of a Jail report is so studiously buried in arithmetic that this is of no great importance. Fifteen months ago there were confined in 32 central, 205 district and 510 subsidiary jails, 360,965 offenders of both sexes—331,815 men and 19,150 women. The ranks of the former had increased 8·6 per cent. on the returns of the previous year; and those of the latter decreased 4·1 per cent. This is the groundwork of the Report, on which the rest of the bulky edifice is painfully and conscientiously built up. The only regret of the Government appears to be that each individual in the great army of evil-doers cannot yield a page of figures. But the prisoners have been sorely tabulated none the less through nearly a hundred pages of fair print. The various creeds sinned in their proper racial proportion or nearly so; but for reasons which are obvious, Buddhists came rather markedly to the front in 1885, when most Burmans were potential dacoits, and the Rangoon police arrested young men as they went out courting after nightfall. But the excess will disappear in a few more reports, and the Government will be happy again.

From this point the Report plunges into the vortex of addition multiplication, subtraction, and rule of three, without shame; and here it is possible to trace the hand of the "lifer" in his cell. In this mysterious sentence, surely, are the results of many months' line-ruling:—"In 1883 the proportion borne by the average daily strength to every 10,000 of the total population of British India was 3·7, and that borne by the number of convicts admitted during the year 7·2. In 1883 the figures were 3·58 and 7·19 respectively. In 1885 the corresponding figures were 3·43 and 7·24." Here, in their zeal for decimals, the compilers have omitted a comma. This should be borne in mind, when preparing the next report, as much of the interest of reports depends on their punctuation. It would be desirable without, if possible, interfering with the existing statistical returns to find the percentage of commas annually dropped in provincial and district returns. The genius of the Report is contagious.

But to return to the maze of percentages; 1·7 per cent. of the prisoners admitted into jail, fifteen months ago, were under 16 years of age; 80·9 per cent. were between sixteen and forty years old; 15·8 per cent. between forty and sixty, and 1·6 over sixty. Seeing that the lower caste Natives have the vaguest possible notions about their age, it would be interesting to find how these fractions were fixed so exactly. Also what happens when a few hundred prisoners attain their fortieth birthday as the returns are being compiled. We challenge the accuracy of those figures, and demand full statistics to prove them.

Here follow masses of percentages—percentages of men and women under sentence of death, or executed, but serving the statistical purposes of a highly centralised Government in death—percentages of sentences, percentages of remissions, punishments, and transportations, till we come to the statement of expenditure, and find that the total cost of keep per prisoner was Rs. 45·5·7. But even this simple statement is split up into six heads, one subtraction, and an elimination; each prisoner being debited with his share of the police-guards, hospital establishment, &c., and credited with the remunerative labours he has performed for the State.

The death-rate in the jails was 33·54 per thousand, which is, on the whole, satisfactory. Roughly, then, our Empire had under lock and key fifteen months ago 340,000 wards, each costing forty-five rupees a-year, of whom nearly 8,000 are to-day dead. Roughly speaking, this is all that the public may be expected to want to know; and all that the Government of India need concern itself with. It cannot, if it wished, act on figures fifteen months old, be they never so faultlessly arranged; but must be contented with an approximate estimate of numbers, cost, and keep, assuming that it were to-morrow to inaugurate a perfectly new system of jail administration. And the theory of the Report is that it may, at some time, be useful to the Government as a stepping-stone to reform. It is hard to see how the present publication fulfils this end in any way.

THE ENGLISH IN INDIA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

American interest in India and in the English rule in India was considerably excited a few months ago by an article in one of the New York reviews, in which a travelled Babu enlightened the American public with a most moving account of the crimes of the English Government and of English society in this country. This remarkable gentleman—we have really forgotten his name though doubtless the editor of the Indian Mirror remembers it—turns out to have been the founder of a school. He has found an imitator in a Mr. Gopal Vinayak Joshi, who, as the paragraphists would say, hails from not a hundred miles from Poona, who has been to America, and who has had strange things to tell his American friends about the way in which the English treat their Native fellow-subjects. We hope it is no breach of confidence to indicate the chief points in a communication which, we suspect, was not meant for other than American ears. The fault at the worst would not in that case be ours, but that of an esteemed Calcutta contemporary which reprints Mr. Joshi's denunciation without protest, and, we half suspect, with something like sympathy. One must think so much the worse, either of the English in India and all the world over—which would be a pity—or of Mr. Joshi—which would be a simple calamity—for the publication of this letter that the editor of the Index, which we understand to be a paper published somewhere in the land of Mr. Barnum, if he had cared much for our reputation or for that of Mr. Joshi, would have done well to have restricted the circulation of the number containing this remarkable letter to the precincts of his publishing office. However, here it is, filling ever so many columns of the Mirror, and it would never do if, with so formidable an indictment drawn up against them, the brutal English, the curish English, the insolent English—for we are all that and much more and worse—were to be left unaware of what Mr. Gopal Vinayak Joshi thought of them at the moment he despatched a letter from Port Said to the editor of the Index. The editor of the Index, by the way, in publishing the letter wherein Mr. Joshi tells of the sins which the English people committed against Mr. Joshi during his voyage from London to Bombay, has not quite acted up to the name of that eminent journal. We look to the Index for indices, and if an index of the sins of the English had been appended to the letter in which they are set out it would have been so much easier to make out, at a glance, what a wicked people we all are. "English cur," "English blockhead," "Low character of English," "Brood of vipers," "Indian idiots," would be prominent headings in such a summary of the contents of the indictment. Thus condensed it would constitute a fearful catalogue of our shortcomings, and would be as useful as the French dictionary of the Brighton lodging-house keeper in "Ici on Parle Français," who, with an indignant "I'll tell you what you are!" turned to its pages when he wanted to give his French visitor a bit of his mind. But, as we have said, we suspect that Mr. Joshi had no wish to let this wonderful letter be seen of men—except of such men as read the Index on its Native soil. "The Indian papers," he sadly confesses, "are, I am afraid, much too loyal to give a corner to such stuff as this." We ourselves have no corner roomy enough for reproducing all that Mr. Joshi has written. If we give what the compilers of old days would have called "elegant extracts" from his letter, it is only because we are much too jealous to let American readers enjoy a monopoly of the good things that he has prepared for them.

First of all, let us acknowledge the courage which has nerved this good man to utter denunciations which in his own view at least brings his neck in danger. He reluctantly accompanied his wife from America, he says, "because I know that I would be ill-treated by the English for my unspokenness, and ultimately imprisoned for life, or committed to the gallows, and I assure you that the time is not far distant." Let us make Mr. Joshi's mind easy on this point. We cannot tell what exalted position he may hereafter attain to; but he may safely leave gaol and gallows out of his reckoning. His troubles began—those at least of them which did not have their beginning when the first Englishman appeared upon the earth—in his relations with that eminent firm whose raison d'être is the saving of trouble to travellers, Messrs. Cook and Son, "proving traitors," because, as he explains, of the English blood that runs their veins, disappointed him in securing a berth on a British India boat, and added to the offence by communicating with him through "a buoyant, burlesque, young-looking English cur." We hope the young cur had a sufficient appreciation of burlesque not to be alarmed at the scene which presented itself in Cook's London office when this ill-used man discovered how he had been wronged. "I was all wrath and indignation," Mr. Joshi tells us. "I burst, as is my wont, into bitter exclamations. I abused the English right and left, and said that their power in India"—are our fire engines in good order by-the-way, and our water mains ready for work?"—"should be blown up and every insult retaliated by bloodshed. Ah, that day will come, continued I. I must go back, awake and stir up my people to their duty from their present lethargy. Oh, you English curs and blockheads, if you do not wish to associate with Hindus, why do you go to India. You are begotten of madmen. You live on Indian bread and butter; you are fattened like pigs in India, and yet you don't want to travel with a Hindu. Ah, you mean villains!" After this the world will think with increased astonishment of the admirable system of the great tourist agents. Admirable managers indeed must they be if clients of this kind wait upon them and leave their office none the worse for the interview. But experience in "personally conducting" has doubtless brought Messrs. Cook and Son into contact with even stranger clients than Mr. Gopal Vinayak Joshi. However, though the Henzada left London without Mr. Joshi and his wife there was the Peshawar in dock, just about to sail, and a passage was secured on that most comfortable of P. and O. steamers. The reason for it does not appear, but Mr. Joshi tells us that he secured a berth for his wife, and booked himself as her servant—a sacrifice to conjugal duty which seems to have been attended with some inconveniences. For instance, he had to sleep upon deck, and to be treated as a "living being good for nothing." In this respect he was worse off than the cattle and the poultry, though for this he has a ready explanation. Cows have a shed on the steamer, he tells us, although according to Christian belief they have no souls, because their milk is nourishing to Baba Log, whom he is good enough to call "a breed of vipers." Don Carlos, shaking his fists at the little king in his cradle, calling him an usurper, and threatening to cut his cape in two for him, or the equally courageous Mr. Eccles, apostrophising another sleeping infant as "Pauper!" are illustrious precedents for Mr. Joshi's controversy with the toddling little Anglo-Indians who pinch their ayahs and drink milk. But he doubtless feels that if the English domination in India is to be crushed at all it must be crushed in the bud. He may have even seen an embryo Collector Sahib or two amongst the young folk on board the Peshawar.

We cannot follow Mr. Joshi through all the griefs of his journey. They seem almost tragical, and hard to parallel in the experience of most P. and O. travellers. But then the position of a gentleman who, travelling with his wife, dutifully elects to go as her servant and be content with a deck passage, is peculiar. If we doubt whether any one laughed and said "Bravo, white waiter, well done!" when a waiter accidentally struck a Native lady with a chair, and made no apology for it, it is not only because Mr. Joshi was in another part of the steamer when the incident is alleged to have occurred. All this is painful, personal, and out of reach of inquiry. There are political inferences in Mr. Joshi's narrative which we turn to with greater interest, and with only one regret. He really ought to have been secured by the Public Service Commission. A gentleman who has discovered that "Indian idiots, or those whose brains are deranged, go to England," and that "if they have any sense it is easily settled by champagne and brandy," might have told Sir Charles Aitchison much that he would have listened to with infinite interest. How much the case for a simultaneous examination in India for the Civil Service would have been strengthened if this fact had been put upon the records of the Commission? And how praters about reform would have been discouraged if, with all the authority that attached to evidence given before that august body, Mr. Joshi had been able to tell the world, as he tells us in this remarkable letter, that "Present reforms advocate meat diet, but beginners cannot look at it without nauseating sensations. As a precautionary step a glass of brandy is first administered to them, and when they are about to tumble down, reform dishes of lungs, heart, and tongue, &c., are placed before them. Indian youths so deformed, swallow what was so obnoxious to them before." These surely are not the young men who are to lay that rod on the back of the English which, in Mr. Joshi's opinion, will do far more than the sending of political delegates to England. The great flagellation is to be done, not by all the politicians that India can bring into congress, but by Mr. Joshi and the Russians. Every beginner in school, he is good enough to tell us, knows by heart the sentence in the Primer, "A rod for a fool's back." "The Anglo-Indian is such a creature. Who will give him a rod on his back? Not the Hindus, not the Mohamedans, but certainly the Russians. If you want iron and coal, go to England; if you want whiskey, go to France and Germany; but for a rod you must go to Russia." Perhaps so. But if we were to ask Russia for a rod she might ask us for a back upon which to lay it. Yet Mr. Joshi is too amusing a gentleman to deserve thinking of in that connection, and even he may talk of rods with impunity—in India, at all events.

BENGAL.

At a meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council, held at Calcutta on the 4th inst., the Hon. A. R. Scoble presented the report of the select committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to civil courts in Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, and Assam. The Hon. Sir Theodore Hope presented the report of the select committee on the Bill to regulate the supply of electricity for lighting and other purposes.

THE success with which the Bengal-Bombay Railway has been floated ought, the Englishman thinks, to convince the Government that the day for four per cent. guarantees is at an end, and that money can be had to any extent on much more moderate terms.

DR. GOETHALS was installed as first Roman Catholic Archbishop of Calcutta on Sunday last. The Cathedral was densely crowded, and the congregation appeared deeply impressed by the solemn ceremonial of enthronement of their new Archbishop. Dr. Goethals, in reply to the congratulations offered by Mr. Woodroffe on behalf of the laity, reminded those present that the Catholic Church in India was now entering upon a new stage of development.

THE bridge over the Gudduck river on the Tirhoot State Railway at Hajipore is rapidly approaching completion, and is expected to be opened for traffic by Sir Rivers Thompson at the end of this month. The first stone was laid by him in presence of Sir Alfred Lyall in January, 1885. The bridge is 2,000 feet long, and consists of 8 spans of 250 feet each of steel resting on massive masonry piers. The level abutment joins on to an arched viaduct half a mile in length over the Sonapore Fair ground, and with the Bengal and North-Western Railway at their Sonapore station.

THE annual meeting of the Calcutta Health Society on the 2nd inst. was well attended. The Lieutenant-Governor presided, and Lady Dufferin was amongst the company. Sir Rivers Thompson spoke in deservedly high terms of the success of the society during the past year, and said that Mr. Cunningham in constituting it, and in having thrown into it all his earnestness and enthusiasm, had established a useful adjunct to the Government. The Bishop of Calcutta, in proposing the resolution commending the society to public sympathy and support, took up good ground in showing that the suspicion that it was antagonistic to certain interests was quite groundless. Its aim was to assist all who were concerned in improving the sanitary state of Calcutta. The Right Rev. speaker pointed out that if the recommendations of the society were carried out a sum of 200 lakhs would be needed, and he commended the frankness with which this startling statement was made.

MADRAS.

THE following appointments are notified :—Mr. Scharlieb to be Second Presidency Magistrate, but will continue to act as Chief Presidency Magistrate. Mr. Maskell to act as Second Magistrate. Colonel Farrington to officiate as Adjutant-General, vice Colonel Elles. Colonel Gunning to officiate as Commissary-General in place of Colonel Hawkes. The Governor in Council expresses the high sense entertained by the Government of Colonel Hawkes's long and valuable services in the Commissariat Department of this (Madras) presidency, extending over a period of more than thirty-two years, and acknowledges the great ability and untiring devotion which Colonel Hawkes has always displayed in the discharge of his duties.

AN English firm (Messrs. Barton and Grindford) having applied to the Secretary of State for permission to undertake the construction of two lines of railway from a point near the Ramiswaram Canal to Madura and Tuticorin, and also to survey any new lines of railway, the question was referred to the Madras Government, who have replied that there appears to be no objection to the concession sought being granted, provided the terms under which it is granted do not prejudicially affect existing interests, or tend to prevent other capitalists coming forward.

LIEUTENANT ENSOR, Adjutant, Bangalore Rifle Volunteers, and local secretary to the Western India Rifle Association, has received a letter from the honorary secretary of the Association at Poona intimating that the Council decline to hold any inquiry into the shooting scandal in connection with the local competition for the Western India match. The local military authorities have convened a court of inquiry to assemble to-day to investigate the matter.

HIS HIGHNESS THE NIZAM, as the acknowledged leader of the Indian Mahomedans, sent a long congratulatory telegram to Her Majesty on her Jubilee. The message was despatched through the Viceroy.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS presided at the anniversary of the Doveton College. In replying to the Principal's complaint about Government grants being reduced, Mr. Bourke remarked that Government, with respect to funds for education, were rather hard up; but he had no doubt that before very long, if there were no wars, and if Madras were to have plentiful crops and no famine, the Exchequer will be replenished.

BOMBAY.

MR. JUSTICE HART is granted furlough for seven months from the 1st April.

HIS EXCELLENCY the Governor has been pleased to appoint Mr. Harold R. King a member of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, vice Mr. F. D. Parker, resigned.

MR. H. N. B. ERSKINE, Commissioner in Sind, is granted furlough for eight months, with subsidiary leave for ten days from the 12th April. Mr. C. B. Pritchard, C.S.I., acts as Commissioner in Sind during Mr. Erskine's absence.

MR. E. J. SINKINON will act for Mr. Rawlins as Accountant-General of Bombay when the latter goes on furlough.

MISS EDITH PECHER and Miss Charlotte Ellaby have been appointed respectively First and Second Physicians of the Cama Hospital for Women and Children.

THE result of the balloting at the Chamber of Commerce for the Port Trustees was that the Hon. F. Forbes Adam and Mr. John Y. Lang were re-elected, and Mr. J. G. Smith appointed to act in the place of Mr. F. D. Parker, who has obtained six months' leave of absence.

MR. FRAMROZ R. JOSHEE, Superintendent General Department, Secretariat, has been appointed to act for Mr. J. Kingsmill, Superintendent of the Government Central Press, who goes to Europe on sick leave.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

SEVERE shocks of earthquake have been felt at Mussoorie and Dehra Doon.

THE Lahore tramway, the first section of which was opened for traffic on the 23rd December last, appears to be doing remarkably well. The receipts covered the working expenses within a month of opening, when only one-half of the projected line was available for traffic. The capital of the company is only one lakh of rupees.

A FEW days ago, according to the Lahore paper, the Afridis kidnapped a hospital assistant, a Mahomedan, of the 1st Bengal Cavalry, from Peshawur. A man came to him and said that a sowar, on his way in from Jumrud (where the 1st Bengal Cavalry have a detachment), had met with an accident, and that it was the adjutant's orders the hospital assistant was to go out and attend to him. On his coming out of his lines he was promptly seized and hurried across the frontier. Since then a letter has been received from him, giving the above particulars, and saying that the Afridis would give him up on payment of a ransom of Rs. 100.

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.*

We cordially welcome the appearance, in the pages of the Asiatic Quarterly, of a Native contributor, more especially of one so able as the present Prime Minister of Indore, Rajah Rughonath Rao. Nor is it easy to overrate the importance of the subject with which he deals, the social relations between Europeans and Natives in India, a country "acquired by the British," as the writer justly reminds us, "with the aid, the good feelings, and the blood, of the Native." Referring, with a glance of affectionate regret, to the comparatively unrestrained intercourse which once existed between the Hakim and the better classes of his subjects (to whom he, if benevolent and sympathising, almost took the place of an Avatar, or incarnation of the Deity), the Rajah goes on to trace how the change to the present attitude, too often one of distant hauteur on the one side, and of sullen defiance on the other, was brought about; and, while pointing out faults on both sides, hopes for a restoration of the ancient footing. Vain expectation! To both rulers and ruled, the trite saying applies: "Tempora mutantur, nos et mutamur in illis." We may as well expect the shadow once more to go back ten degrees on the sundial of Ahaz, as hope to bring back conditions which have ceased to exist. Nor, sooth to say, are we at all sure that it would be desirable to do so. The old devotion of the Hindu to the European was analogous to that of a helpless child towards a parent. No wise father would wish his boy to be for ever helpless and in leading-strings. He would hope to receive from the lad, as he grew in years and in discretion, an affection, founded, not alone on the accident of parentage, but on an intelligent appreciation of his own qualities. We have emancipated the Native from swaddling-clothes, let us now endeavour to give him, not "mere book-learning"—absit omen! we have had enough of that—but that "culture," that higher education, which may fit him to appreciate what is best in the European race, and to become a self-reliant, useful member of society; and, without which, "book-learning" is valueless. In this direction it is, we think, that we may look, with all reasonable hope, to the gradual growth of an improved feeling between rulers and ruled.

Nor are we to forget the inimitable charm exercised by female influence. More has been done by Lady Dufferin, acting with the warm approval, and, indeed, under the inspiration, of the Empress-Queen, to soften asperities, and to bring about a rapprochement between European and Native, than it is easy to estimate. Mr. Watney, in an urgent appeal on behalf of Lady Dufferin's Fund, points out how great is the influence exercised by women in Indian families, and how, chiefly from ignorance—which converse with European ladies, especially lady doctors, will gradually remove—that influence has often been most baneful. Mr. Watney presses on us the consideration, that the character of a national movement ought to be given to the undertaking in this Jubilee year; nor is it, indeed, easy to imagine an offering more acceptable to Her Majesty, who has ever shown, both in will and in deed, such enlightened sympathy with the sex which she adorns than one which would alleviate the sufferings of so many thousands of Her Indian sisters and subjects.

We are still on the confines of the same topic, the relations between the two races, in dealing with Sir L. Griffin's Paper on the Public Service of India, the question under consideration by the Service Commission to which the writer refers being the equalising, to a certain extent, of the position in the service of Natives and Europeans. Obviously, this can only be done by means of a large admixture of the Native element. Sir Lepel, whose article deserves most careful perusal, would not admit Natives, as a rule, to the Covenanted Civil Service, though by no means excluding those who, passing the examination in England, would have proved their claim to equal treatment by their courage and talents, and by the expenditure of a considerable sum of money on a foreign and expensive education (p. 278). "Competition for Natives he regards as a mere fetish, there being" (p. 275) "no more certain method of obtaining the wrong men, and of excluding those most desirable," and as a thing which ought not to be thought of. Reminding the reader, that "no Oriental Government will endure, that voluntarily surrenders what, throughout the East, is one of the normal and necessary attributes of power, the absolute right of appointing, by favour or merit, to high office, at the will of the ruler" (p. 280), Sir Lepel suggests an examination of certain carefully-nominated and selected candidates, whose parents should (p. 283) "possess a substantial stake in the country, to afford the Government some guarantee of the loyalty and respectability of the candidate." These should, in each Province, be tested in a manner which we warmly commend, and which our writer shall himself state. "The classical and oriental languages of India would be compulsory; English should be optional; and those subjects of natural science which cannot be taught in India for want of material and professors, should be altogether abandoned. And, in order to secure manliness and courage in our Native Public Service, qualities far more useful than mere book-learning, I would insist on a compulsory athletic test in horsemanship and the use of arms. The magistrate, who cannot ride twenty miles across country to inquire into a murder, or would be afraid to shoot dead with his revolver the leader of a riot, may well be left to the counting-house or the shop."

Subject to the above, and to the remark, that the salary of the Native should not exceed one-third of that of his European confrère, Sir Lepel would (p. 271) make over to Natives almost the entire judicial service, reserving criminal powers to the district magistrate, and retaining a few English judges in the High Court. But, as he wisely adds, "the higher branches of the Executive service must, to-day and for all time, be retained in English hands."

Mr. Horace Bell, than whom no one can speak with higher authority regarding Indian Railways, contributes a suggestive paper on this subject, pointing out, among other matters which deserve attention, that our lowest passenger rates (2½ pie per mile) are much too high, and that a diminution of them, experimentally made on the Tirhoot Railway, was attended with an increase of 75 per cent. in the number of passengers and of 50 per cent. in the amount of receipts. Mr. Bell looks forward to the time when the working expenses of all Indian Railways will be vastly diminished, and the profits proportionately increased, by the opening up of the enormous existing, but almost untouched, coalfields, which, he says, will render India in a few years all but independent of English coal (p. 347). Most of this coal is within, or near, Chota Nagpore, a highly metalliferous province, on which its late Commissioner, Mr. Hewitt, has penned an interesting monograph, showing that, while it notoriously abounds in iron, the coalfield, of which it is nearly the centre, covers no less than 6,751 square miles; and he points out (p. 420) Barrakur, on the Manbhum border, as the probable future Sheffield of India.

Calling attention en passant to a lively article by the ever-amusing Mr. C. T. Buckland, on "Indian Field Sport," we must briefly advert to lands further East. Both Sir Rutherford Alcock, and Dr. Lockhart, offer instructive comments on the Marquis Tseng's article (in the January number of the Asiatic Quarterly), on the Foreign Policy of China.

It will suffice here to say that both writers, considering the inefficiency of the army and navy of China (due, as it is, mainly to the corruption and venality of the officials), are not inclined very highly to value her power of defending "her coasts and trade from insult and injury, or of meeting in the field . . . the disciplined troops of a first-class European Power:" though both recognise the great power of endurance conferred on the State by the vast territorial extent which, in common with Russia, it possesses.

The facile pen and close observation of Mr. Holt Hallett (who had the compliment paid him of being "the most inquisitive person who had ever been" in Siam) enables him to contribute a most interesting sketch of the deplorable state of that fertile and metalliferous country; while Mr. J. D. Rees, in "A Trip to North China and Corea," affords much information, concerning the latter especially, leading us to bewail the short-sighted policy which induced the British god Terminus to withdraw his foot from that no man's land (or sea), Port Hamilton.

Mr. Boulger, rightly observing the great interest which attaches to all our early attempts to establish a trade with China, has extracted from that mine of information, the India Office records, some very curious and entertaining particulars regarding our first settlement in Chusan, and has compiled a narrative (of which the first part only appears in the present number), which, like everything written by the accomplished Editor, more than repays perusal.

BUDDHISM IN CHRISTENDOM.*

The religion of Buddha has become immensely fashionable in the Western Hemisphere. Its votaries are now reckoned by tens, where formerly they could be counted by ones and twos. Nor is it altogether strange that this should be the case, for the precepts which it inculcates are lofty, pure and ennobling. If language could make a saving faith, Buddhism would compare favourably with any creed which has taken root in the world. We have no fault to find with Mr. Lillie in drawing attention to the rich mine of moral law laid down by the great teacher whom he admires; but we are not prepared to acquiesce in his suggestion that thoughtful minds should "begin to see in all this a possible mission for England, namely, to fuse the old creeds in one great crucible, and eliminate the superstitious parts. Ancient creeds had much once in common, and it is chiefly this common portion, the vital essence, that has been allowed to evaporate." First of all it may be inquired, how is this melange to be prepared? Who is to decide what is superstition and what is not? A Protestant, for instance, would reject under this head not a few of the dogmas of the Roman Catholic Church with Transubstantiation at their head. Would his Holiness of the Scarlet Robes acquiesce in this arrangement? Exeter Hall, again, would deny the apostleship of Muhammad, and reject a creed which allows Polygamy and its disciples; would cast aside as an idle penance the pilgrimage to Mecca, albeit a saving portion of the faith of the Muslim world. What, too, is to be the decision in regard to the tooth of Buddha, so supremely sacred in the eyes of his pious followers? Again, who is to be the mediator for the sins of mankind, or are there to be several, so that each votary shall be able to choose his own advocate to make intercession before the Creator of the Universe; or is there to be no such office in the newly-created religion, each individual being left to work out his own way, and do as seemeth best in his own eyes? But why multiply difficulties; the task of reconciling all faiths and merging them into one homogeneous whole is the dream of an enthusiast. To start a creed which will be accepted even by a band of chosen adherents is difficult, but to devise a belief which shall satisfy the inward cravings of all mankind scarcely comes within the pale of possibility. Verily, were the attempt made, the labour might well bring with sorrow to the grave the grey hairs of the Episcopal Bench.

Still, we are not prepared to condemn Mr. Lillie's book. Truthful inquiry and honest research can never result in other than a welcome addition to the stock of human learning and wisdom. To enter into a refutation of his arguments is not within our scope, the more especially as the task has been ably and, to our judgment, convincingly performed by Professor Kellogg in his work entitled "The Light of Asia and the Light of the World," reviewed at the time in these columns. It is all very well for Mr. Lillie to characterise that author as illiterate and bigoted, but not a few will, we venture to say, think otherwise, ourselves amongst the number. But thoughtful inquirers, anxious to learn what has to be said in praise of Buddhism, would do well to read Mr. Lillie's Essays. They are singularly able and full of intelligence; and if some will venture to disagree with his conclusions, at any rate, all can concede his talent, his enthusiasm, and his literary powers.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS' ALBUMS.—No. 23.

MISS JOSEPHINE AGABEG'S CONCERT.—Miss Josephine Agabeg, the well-known pianiste, gave a successful concert at the Steinway Hall on the 16th March, when she had the valuable assistance of Mdle. José Sherrington, Mdme de Fonblanque, Miss Ida Agabeg (débütante), Mdme. Marian McKenzie, Miss Helen Meason, Mr. Gilbert Campbell, and Mr. Wilhelm Ganz. The programme, which was of a high classical order, was well carried out. Three of Miss Agabeg's pupils, the Misses Waterhouse and Miss Plowden, also took part, and were much applauded for their able rendering of some of Schumann and Chopin's difficult works. "Faded Heather," a new and pretty song by Miss Josephine Agabeg, was well sung by Miss Ida Agabeg, evoking a hearty encore. This latter lady has a sweet soprano voice, and bids fair to do well in the musical profession. The Miss Agabegs are daughters of the late Joseph Agabeg, of Agabeg Brothers, merchants, Calcutta and Rangoon.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE OF INDIA.—I.

THE April number of the Asiatic Quarterly—a Review which has rapidly attained to a very high position under its able editor, Mr. Demetrius Boulger—contains an admirable article from the pen of Sir Lepel Griffin upon the questions regarding the Public Service of India, which are now being discussed before a special Commission of Inquiry. It may be said at once that the appointment of this Commission finds no justification in Sir Lepel Griffin's eyes. He holds, as do many others, that it was a concession yielded by the Government to the outcry raised by a numerically small but noisy class of the Indian community, which has received an English education, for a larger share in the administration of the affairs of their country. But he points out that an Englishman has by birthright, descent and language (putting aside all question of conquest) fully as much right to govern North India as a native of Madras or Bengal, who would be more alien and far more obnoxious to the resident population. He further asserts that for an inquiry such as the one now under discussion, a Commission is the worst form of inquiry that could be suggested:—

The Civil Service of India, a body of English officers, for an estimate of whose administrative merits we may fairly appeal to history and the verdict of foreign critics, naturally looked askance at a tribunal which seemed to place them on their defence, and to question their right to the position they hold under express covenant with the Government. On the other hand, the mass of the people were not only indifferent to the Commission, but had never heard of its existence, and knew nothing of the subjects it discussed. The graver and more conservative of the educated classes had no sympathy with the inquiry, for they regard with ill-concealed suspicion the ambition of the eager reformers of young India who desire to level all the mountains and to fill up all the valleys to the dead level of democracy.

In proof of this last assertion the writer calls attention to the fact that the persons amongst the Native community who have pressed forward to tender evidence to the Commission have not been the country gentlemen of position and distinguished loyalty, the members of ancient though decayed families, the older and more approved officers of Government, and those shrewd, well-informed and far-sighted men, who are well-known to the authorities in every part of the country, and whose advice is always asked and often taken on every question affecting popular sentiments. "All these," says Sir Lepel, "have avoided the vain and empty discussions of the Commission. Those who have hastened to offer themselves for examination are for the most part the men who know least of the country and people, and whose opinions no administrator of sense would regard—pleaders, clerks, babús, and young editors, whose newspapers have been conspicuous for sedition and malignant abuse of Government officials, and whose evidence the Commission might with perfect propriety have declined."

We know what will be said of these bold and sweeping assertions by those pseudo-philanthropists and amiable doctrinaires who preach the doctrine of discontent in India, inveigh against British rule, and clamour for what they call the "Native rights" to greater political and administrative power. It will be said by these busybodies that Sir Lepel Griffin is a civilian of civilians—that he is imbued with all the prejudices of his covenanted class, and that he is out of all touch and sympathy with the people amongst whom he himself holds high official position. Therefore it will be argued that it matters little what his objections to the Commission are, or whether he be right in his opinion that instead of such a Commission the Government of India would have obtained a more valuable report had it appointed a committee of three eminent persons to address written questions to all those gentlemen, English and Indian, whose opinions were known to be of weight and value, not forgetting the more important of the political associations. The fact remains that the Commission has been appointed, and to avail now at its appointment is too late. Admitting the force of the last argument, we by no means admit the assertions which represent Sir Lepel Griffin as an official without sympathy with the peoples of India. Knowing the man well, we make bold to say that no covenanted civilian of India is less trammelled with class prejudices, or has more honest sympathy with the Natives, or is more anxious for their advancement in every way. But for the sleek, self-seeking Bengali Babú—the darling of the philanthropists and theorists—he has not sympathy in the way in which the Babú wants it to be shown to him, viz., by giving him a false political position.

The power of misquoting Shakespeare or misunderstanding Darwin will not save the Empire. It is true that the Capitol was once saved by the cackling of geese, but it would not be wise to count on a repetition of the miracle; and not a single Bengali Babú, from Assam to the Sunderbunds, would fire a shot for the English if they were engaged in a war à outrance with Russia. We should then have to trust to the brave fighting races of the Punjab, recruited and led by Mahomedan Malikhs and Sikh Sirdars; the loyal and noble class who are being elbowd out of the public service by plausible, half educated scribes.

These words will, no doubt, give great offence when they are read in Calcutta by the Bengali agitators, as they will in London when read by their sympathising friends here. But they are words of truth and soberness, as all who have practical experience of India and the Natives thereof can testify. It is to be hoped that the British Parliament will not be led away into other beliefs, however noisy the clamour or however great the pressure from pushing placemen. That the Natives of India should have a large share in the responsibilities of administration no true friend of India denies, and least of all the writer whose most thoughtful paper we are touching upon. But, as he writes: "The real friends of India are not those who persuade the Natives that they are already the equals of their teachers, and that after a few years of imperfect training they are ripe for institutions which in England are the outcome of the constitutional struggles of centuries, and have been bought by blood and tears, by much suffering and by long endurance."

[COMMUNICATED.]

THE battle of Bimetallism still rages. Like as in wars of a sanguineous nature most of the combatants now engaged are greatly in the dark as to the cause and merits of the conflict, and they but dimly comprehend the real value of the contested issues. As an illustration of the fallibility of Governments, and the biassed interest of the individuals composing national Councils, it appears that the Indian Government advocate Bimetallism with vehement earnestness, while the Home Parliament resolutely declines to listen to the voice of the charmers. There are evidently some apparent international and antagonistic interests connected with the question now subjected to the active influence, benign or the reverse, of modern ventilation. Let us quietly examine this knotty problem of currency as dispassionately as possible, for the real danger of arriving at false conclusions is the natural tendency of becoming heated during the progress of an argument, and thus being allured into the undesirable course of more or less blindly advocating one favoured side of the question.

Gold has been the British standard of value from time immemorial, and as Englishmen we have acquired a national habit of regulating all commercial and monetary transactions by expressing their current market value in pounds sterling, or some unaltered fraction of a sovereign. Now, while the nominal value of a gold coin, in consequence of its being the recognised standard of value accepted by the whole nation for ages past, is as stable as the throne its actual inherent value, its purchasing power, and its control over the employment of labour, is constantly altering without appreciable intermission. This fluctuation in the proportionate value of gold when measured with manual labour or any of the multitudinous necessities and commodities of life is governed by various influences, the principal being the increasing or diminishing supply of the precious metal, the abundance or dearth of food, which is the propelling force of labour, the augmentation or scarcity in the number of workmen, the extended use of machinery, which partially supersedes the employment of muscle in many branches of industry, and the multiplication of civilised requirements, which, calling for the expenditure of more and still more human force, acts as a safety-valve upon the dangerous accumulation of enforced idleness that would otherwise accompany the expanding application of steam power. The present resultant of the above forces, partly centrifugal and partly centripetal, to the actual result is an amazing depreciation in the relative value of gold as contrasted with such a necessary article of consumption as wheat, and compared with the buying power of metal five or ten centuries ago. It is obvious that any fresh discovery of rich and extensive gold deposits would inevitably and speedily result in a further depreciation of the metal, and a prolonged famine in the auriferous harvest-fields would have an unswerving tendency to increase the purchasing capacity of a pound sterling, but the other factors in the involved problem that possess the power of slightly altering the value of currency are of such an occult and conflicting nature that their bearing on the question is not so easily understood.

In India the standard of value is silver. The dusky Natives of that big peninsula conduct their business with the assistance of a purely silver currency as smoothly and as profitably as the dominating race carry on commerce by the help of gold. But silver, by reason of its greater abundance, through the appliances and inventions of modern civilisation being used to extract the metal from the ore with a rapidity unthought of in the past, through the increased gross profit obtainable from prospecting and mining operations, and through the aggregate vastness of recent discoveries, has been subjected to more important and rapid fluctuations in value than seems possible in the case of gold. So great has been the recent depreciation of silver that the fundamental axiom of the precious metals being as much articles of commerce as sugar or jute is made clearly apparent. The man who accumulates and hoards silver or gold, with the hope of more advantageously employing his wealth at some future time, is equally as liable to a heavy loss from depreciation as the farmer who stores the produce of his fields with the expectation of increased profit, but with the result of a diminished return. Without doubt the silver currency of India is subject to the same laws that affect the gold currency of England; but whereas the alteration in the relative value of gold has been gradual and the depreciation in the relative value of silver has been rapid—at least as regards its modern development—it becomes an interesting subject for financial inquiry as to what extent the accelerated intercourse of nineteenth century civilisation regulates the quick adjustment of relative values in that distant land, as to how far the luxurious development of steam and electricity affects the demand for labour and its sufficient excessive or diminished supply in that young empire, and as to the influence of education and manufactures in retarding or hastening the balance of values. However, passing over these secondary but interesting considerations, we may safely infer that the depreciation of silver has been accomplished by the operation of primary commercial laws, and that all the various influences that affect the adjustment of market prices have been inevitably represented in India, and that any dislocation of normal processes is only of a local, temporary, and unimportant nature.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE MOSLIMS OF BENARES.—The Indian Courier, a Hindoo paper, says:—"The Mahomedans of Benares, as a community, observed the Jubilee in a style which could not be too highly admired. The style was one of Eed, which, according to their religion, is a day of very great importance. They held a prayer-meeting at their general prayer ground near Raj Ghat, which was attended by thousands of Mahomedans of all ranks. His Highness the Nawab of Tonk was among the number. After the Khutba was read, the Mahomedans assembled in one voice, and in a chorus pronounced, Ameen! Ameen! Ameen! which created a great impression in the minds of all assembled, believers as well as non-believers. After the ceremony was over, blankets, corn and money were given away in alms by his Highness the Nawab of Tonk. It needs be mentioned that the idea of this prayer-meeting was a spontaneous one, and not inspired by any outside influence. All the more creditable to the community. Although thousands of Mahomedans had assembled on the spot, the assembly was a most orderly one, and everything was conducted with becoming decorum and solemnity.

SOCIAL INTERCOURSE AT CALCUTTA.—The Indian Mirror says:—A banquet, followed by an evening party, was recently given in honour of Mr. and Mrs. George Yule by Sir Henry Harrison and Mr. and Mrs. Cotton, at their residence, 3, Kyd-street. It was a large and successful gathering, of which a novel and pleasing feature was the considerable number of Hindoo ladies present. It was, we believe, the first party of its kind in Calcutta—the first dinner given by distinguished Englishmen to which Indian gentlemen and ladies have been freely invited. About sixty guests—ladies and gentlemen—Europeans, Hindoo, and Mahomedan—sat to dinner, at which the health of Mr. and Mrs. Yule and Mrs. Yule Smith was proposed by our worthy hosts, and warmly received. The grounds were illuminated, and an amateur Bengali concert party played well-selected tunes. The ladies contributed to the entertainment by their music, in which a daughter of the well-known Tagore family took part. These social gatherings promoting, as they undoubtedly do, the growth of friendly feelings between the community, come upon us with peculiar fitness in the wake of the Imperial Jubilee. Sir Henry Harrison and Mr. Cotton have broken through a long-standing prejudice, and set a praiseworthy example which other Englishmen should not be slow to imitate, and to which our countrymen would do well to respond.

THE GOVERNMENT AND HIGHER EDUCATION.—The Indian Mirror says:—We could hardly believe the statement made in a Bombay paper that the Finance Committee have proposed a reduction of between two and three lakhs of rupees in the educational grants. It now remains to be seen what support the Government of India gives to this proposal. Already the Indian Government spends much less than it ought to for educational purposes, and it would be an egregious folly to reduce its present expenditure for education. The Educational Department does not admit of the least reduction. We trust Lord Dufferin will not give his sanction to this highly impolitic suggestion of the Finance Committee. His Excellency must know that nothing would make his Government more unpopular and unbearable than discouragement of education, which is universally admitted to be the chief blessing of British rule in India.

MR. HERBERT GLADSTONE.—The Indian Spectator says:—“Mr. Herbert Gladstone could not have seen enough of India for all practical purposes. But he has utilised his opportunities to the best advantage, and is not likely to let the grass grow under his feet, however reticent he may have appeared to his interviewers. At any rate, he has seen enough of the country to tempt him to come out again next spring, other engagements permitting. Nothing could be more interesting to himself or more useful to us than a second visit from Mr. Gladstone, and if he could induce the Grand Old Man himself to spend a few weeks in India, it would leave nothing to be desired. We do not see why a cruise on Indian waters, say on the Sunbeam, need be less acceptable than elsewhere.”

THE LATE MRS. TUCKER.—The Indian Spectator says:—Mrs. Tucker, of the Salvation Army, one of the most reckless workers in faith, has gone to her rest. It is hard to conceive such an energetic spirit inhabiting a frame so light and fragile. Her enthusiasm was absolutely phenomenal for the Eastern mind, and we take it for a fact, though we may not see it, that its influence will spread over generations and its memory will stimulate the effort so recklessly devoted by her people to their Saviour's cause.

THE NON-SLAUGHTER OF COWS ON JUBILEE DAY.—The Hindu says:—The Government of Bombay have contributed substantially to the future development of amity and friendship between the Mahomedans and Hindoos by commending in an official resolution the decision of the Mahomedan butchers not to kill cows on the Jubilee day. Such a recognition on the part of the Government would stimulate the exercise of mutual forbearance, and would induce both parties to yield to, and respect the wishes of, the other. It would produce the impression on the Mahomedan mind that our rulers are as anxious as ourselves that both the communities should always cultivate feelings of fellowship and cordiality towards each other. The Hindoos would appreciate the conduct of their co-religionists all the better, and would strive to win similar praise by displaying the same readiness to sacrifice their own prejudices for the sake of their Mahomedan fellow-brethren when their turn comes.

THE EFFECT OF THE JUBILEE.—It is pleasing to read the following in the Hindu:—“No one can entertain a doubt that the celebration of this memorable event (the Jubilee) in almost every town and village throughout the country and the permanent memorials which will be erected in many places, will have the effect of quickening the political consciousness of the people. More people will come to know what sort of a person the Queen is and how she has been ruling her empire. Their feeling of loyalty will become more real and more active, and they will learn to gather comfort from the uniform benevolence of her character and rule against local vagaries and hardship. The bond of attachment between the Indian and the English nation will be drawn closer than ever, and each will look upon the other with greater confidence and brotherly feeling. The reign of Queen Victoria has been one of the longest in the annals of England, and that she may live long enough to make her reign the longest not only in the history of England, but in that of any country in the world, is the sincere and devout prayer of the people of India.”

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

It has been settled that not only the three lancer regiments, but the 7th Bengal Cavalry also, remain in Upper Burma, to the end of the hot weather at any rate.

RECRUITING is actively proceeding, a contemporary hears, among the Goorkhas, some of the new battalions being actually in excess of the authorised establishment. The Gharwalis of the 2nd battalion, 4th Goorkhas, are therefore to be transferred to the 2nd battalion, 3rd Goorkhas, on the formation of the latter battalion.

OWING to the well-known unhealthiness of the troops in the Dehli Fort, it is considered probable that the No. 5 Battery, 1st Brigade, Southern Division, Royal Artillery, will not be sent thereon, arrival from Burma, but to some more healthy place.

The following Medical officers have been detailed to proceed to England:—Surgeon-Major A.A. Macrobin, by the troopship of March 20th; Surgeon-Major D. C. Grose, by troopship of April 2nd; Surgeon Baker, by troopship leaving about the 1st of May.

AN Army Schoolmistress writes:—“Having just arrived in India I find that my pay next year as a married schoolmistress will amount to £26 12s. 3½d. On engagement in England by the Director-General of Military Education, I was informed that my pay, as a 3rd class army schoolmistress, would be £30 per annum, and this amount is inserted on my appointment paper. As there is every probability of the rupee becoming still more depreciated in value, the difference between what married army schoolmistresses should receive, namely, £30 per annum, and what they actually will receive from the Indian Government, will become a very serious matter. Would anyone kindly inform me why the unfortunate married schoolmistress should not receive the equivalent of our English pay, as is done in every other instance, including that of the schoolmasters?”

THE following notification is published in the Army Circular:—The Commander-in-Chief has noticed in the annual school inspection reports the great disparity between the number of men on the school books and the number that attend the school inspection. The usual reply given by commanding officers when asked the reason for this small attendance is that parades and military trainings interfere with it; but as long previous notice is always given of the Inspector's visit, and as the inspection usually lasts more than one day, his Excellency considers that with a little forethought and arrangement nearly all the men on the school books could attend the inspection without their current duties and parades being interfered with.

AMONGST the passengers by the last mail steamer from home was Colonel G. T. Pretymann, R.A., the future Assistant Adjutant-General of Artillery in India. Colonel Pretymann will, however, not take up his destined duties till Major Keith's period of service as Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General of Artillery expires, when the new arrangement of the Staff of the Artillery, which was notified some time ago, will be carried out. This, it will be remembered, involves the absorption of the Deputy Assistant-General of Artillery, while providing the Inspector-General with a Brigade-Major for the cold weather, and abolishes also the present post of Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General of Artillery.

In the last issue of the Army Circular are republished the proceedings of a court-martial held at Bhamo on Jan. 18, at which Jemadar Uttur Singh, 26th Punjab Infantry, was charged with “having at Bhamo, on Nov. 15, 1886, misbehaved in the presence of an armed party of the enemy, against whom it was his duty to act, by saying to the men of F Company 26th Regiment Punjab Infantry, which company he commanded, ‘run, run, retire,’ or words to that effect.” He was also charged with “having at Bhamo, on Nov. 15, 1886, misbehaved in the presence of an armed party of the enemy, against whom it was his duty to act, by running away when he should have stayed and fought.” The court found the prisoner guilty of both charges, and sentenced him to be dismissed from the service. H.E. Sir Frederick Roberts, in confirming the sentence, says:—“I am unable to accept the recommendation to mercy. At first, in the face of an unknown danger, Jemadar Uttur Singh acted with prudence and decision, but no sooner had the presence of the enemy been realised than he shamelessly fled, carrying with him his company. I deeply regret such conduct on the part of a Native officer who has done long and faithful service; but I am quite unable to reduce a sentence which does no more than adequately mark the gravity of the offence.”

SERGEANT EDMOND FOWLER, V.C., is the first brave man deprived of the much coveted Cross for Valour by sentence of a court-martial since the Victoria Cross was instituted some thirty years ago. He has been tried for embezzlement, and reduced to the rank of private.

FOR THE WOMEN.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

"Ave Imperatrix, Moriturne te Salutant!"

We knit a riven land to strength by cannon, code and sword;
We drove the road for all men's feet, we bridged the raving ford;

We cleared the waste of force and wrong, we bade the land be still,
And, wheresoe'er that will was good, we wrought the peoples' will.

The wisdom of the West is theirs—our schools are free to all,
The strength of all the West is theirs—to prop them lest they fall;

And men may say what things they please, and none dare stay their tongue,

But who has spoken out for these, the women and the young!

Who know but you, O men we taught and men who teach us now,

Co-heirs of our eight hundred years and..... Servants of the Cow—

Who know but you the life you cloak secure from alien stare?
Are all our gifts for men alone, or may your women share?

Small wish have they for learning's light or wisdom of the West—

Small wish have you that they should learn, or we should break their rest,

But—pitiless as when He spoke, untempered, quick to slay—
The curse God laid on Eve is theirs for heritage to-day.

You know the "Hundred Danger Time" when gay with paint and flowers,

Your household gods are bribed to help the bitter, helpless hours;

You know the worn and rotten mat whereon the mother lies;
You know the Sootak room unclean,—the cell wherein she dies.

Dies—with the babble in her ear of midwife's muttered charm, Dies—spite young life that strains to stay—the suckling in her arm;

Dies in the three times heated air—scorched by the Birthfire's breath—

Foredoomed, you say lest anguish lack, to haunt her home in death.

These things you know and more than these—grim secrets of the Dead,

Foul horrors done in ignorance, by Time on Folly bred;

The women have no voice to speak, but none can check your pen—

Turn for a moment from your strife and plead their cause, O men!

Help now—for your own sakes give help Look! since the world began

'Was never people walked apart—the woman from the man.

And you are rich in all our lore, you make our thoughts your own,

But, by the mothers of your race, you cannot rise alone.

Help here—and not for us the boon and not to us the gain—

Make room to save the babe from death, the mother from her pain.

Is it so great a thing we ask?—Is there no road to find
When women of our people seek to help your womenkind?

No word to sap their faith, no talk of Christ or creed need be,

But woman's help in woman's need and woman's ministry.

Such healing as the West can give, that healing may they win.

Draw back the pardah for their sakes and let our women in!

OBITUARY.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL HANCOCK.

Lieut.-General Hancock, Director-General of Railways in India, who died at Calcutta on the 9th inst., joined the service as Second Lieutenant, Royal Engineers, in June, 1852, arriving in this country in July, 1854. He attained to the rank of Lieutenant the same year; and was attached to the Sappers and Miners, Poona, in the following year. In 1858 he was appointed commanding officer of the corps, and in the same year obtained the rank of Captain. In the following year he was appointed Assistant Engineer, and acting Executive Engineer of the Poona District. In January, 1860, General Hancock was transferred to Bombay, where he held the appointment of Assistant to the Superintendent of Harbour Defences. In May of the same year he was appointed acting Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways in Gujarat. He subsequently held the appointments of acting Executive Engineer in Surat and Broach and Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways, Surat; and later on of Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways, North-East Extension, G. I. P. Railway. In March, 1863, he was again transferred to Bombay as Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways. Returning from a two years' furlough to Europe, he was in February, 1865, appointed Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways and officiating Consulting Engineer for the Vihar Water Works. From 1870 to 1871, in which latter year he obtained the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, he held the appointment of Deputy Consulting Engineer for Railways in addition to those of Under-Secretary to Government, Railway Branch, and Consulting Engineer for Reclamations. Returning from furlough to Europe in December, 1874, he resumed charge of the above offices. He had subsequently another furlough to Europe, and was in 1881 appointed Joint Secretary to Government, Railway Branch. From May to November, 1883, General Hancock's services were temporarily placed at the disposal of the Government of India. He was again placed on special duty under the Government of India from January to March, 1884, in which year he obtained the rank of Major-General. In June, 1884, he was reappointed as Chief Engineer, first class, and Joint Secretary to Government, Railway Branch, Bombay. From November, 1885, to January, 1886, General Hancock has been working in the sister presidency as Director-General of Railways and Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Railway Branch; and was on special duty in connection with the Frontier Railways in March and April, 1886. He was elected chairman of the Corporation in 1877 and 1878, and at the end of his term of office in the latter year the Corporation recorded a special vote of thanks to him for the ability and uniform courtesy with which he had discharged his duties.

THE LATE MR. EDWARD BROOME, C.E.

Mr. W. Martin Wood writes to us as follows:—

Some little time back your "Domestic Occurrences" contained the name of Mr. Edward Broome, Civil Engineer, as having died at Southport, something under 60 years of age. It struck me then that a note of Mr. Broome's quiet work in India ought to be made; but opportunity has not served me until now, and I have no exact particulars by me. He went out to carry forward the late Maharajah Holkar's project of erecting cotton mills at Indore. This he did from, I believe, the very foundations of the mills to the fitting up of the machinery, and then carried on the concern successfully for many years until his retirement some time since 1880. It was in 1875 I met him at Indore and was shown over all the factory, and heard him describe, with modest pride, how the whole of the construction and machine work had been carried through solely, as I understood, by aid of the Native maitres and fitters whom he had taught. One can readily imagine that it required true British perseverance thus to set up and organise a bit of Lancashire on the plain of Malwa. Having just come up the Simrol Ghat by the old Bombay and Agra-road—a good piece of engineering work but with many very steep gradients—I asked how they had managed to get up the boilers, large wheels, and other heavy iron machinery. You must remember this was done long before the Indore railway was even thought of; so that from Khindwa, all through Nimar, and past that deep defile, where are (or were) the Burwai Iron Works, the haulage had to be done by bullock power. "Well," said Broome, "I really don't know how we did it, but here it is." The mills were then working at full power, and preparations were being made for additional factories since erected. He showed me the substantial cotton cloths they were making—no china clay and oversizing which some of the Bombay mills have been sophisticated into using—and pointed to different descriptions that were going into all parts of Central India and Rajputana, including the striped blue and white stuff much affected in the latter province. He also explained how they had tried to meet the whim of the people both as to buying cotton and selling the goods, so as to conciliate prejudices and make a steady trade to rival the imported Manchester goods. Something should be said for the prince-merchant, who used to be criticised for his money-making propensities. The design to introduce this modern steam-driven industry was said to be entirely the Maharajah's own conception, as it was his own capital that was sunk in the great experiment. Neither Mr. Broome nor anyone else could say what the factory had cost. It used to be spoken of as eight lakhs; but, judging roughly from mills of similar size in Bombay, the outlay must have been much more than that sum, especially considering the very heavy cost of carriage of all the machinery from the seaboard. To set against that would be the cheaper cost of masonry and brickwork; but even the latter—there was a brickwork chimney 80 feet high—would require many special appliances. As to the fuel difficulty, they had not begun to feel that seriously; chiefly wood was used, but they will have had some of the Mapani coal from the Central Provinces since the railway has been carried to Indore. In course of conversation with the Hon. Dewar Ruggonath Rao, he explained that they were providing for future supplies of wood fuel not only by conserving the few forests left but by planting. Perhaps some of your correspondents may say how the fuel question has been met under the increased consumption of the Indore mills, for the scant forests of India are ill-matched against the absorbing demand of steam furnaces; and this problem of reforestation is a practical question for all India, alike in British territory and Native States.

THE WAR TROPHIES COURTS.

The whole aim of this section is to illustrate the Victories of War by a collection of Armour, Arms (including Artillery), Accoutrements, Flags, Medals, and Orders, as well as Characteristic Portraits and Pictures of Engagements. Official and Private Documents and Books—in fact, all that is illustrative of the People, the Country, and the Campaign in each particular War during Her Majesty's reign, 1837-1887. In this way the collection is intended to serve an Educational as well as a Patriotic purpose. The progress in the equipment of our Naval and Military forces will be clearly demonstrated by the comparison of the old and the new. A special feature will be made of the Decorations gained during this period.

Every effort is being made to make this Court complete, and for this purpose loans of any of the above-mentioned articles are particularly invited. Insurance has been most amply arranged for. Transport will be paid by the Committee. Communications should be sent to the Commissioner for War Trophies, A. EGMONT

BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE
 ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it ... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

MONDAY, APRIL 4, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 18th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 16th March; and from Calcutta to the 15th March.

THE Public Service Commission has been dissolved, and a sub-committee, consisting of six of its members, appointed to continue the inquiry.

A RESOLUTION, issued by the Bombay Government on the 11th inst., intimates that the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the charges brought against Mr. G. H. D. Wilson, Political Agent, Cambay, by Mr. Shamrao N. Land, the Dewan of the State, have found him guilty. Mr. Wilson has been suspended pending a reference of the case to the Secretary of State.

MR. WILSON has decided to appeal against the decision of Government, and a representation to the Secretary of State on the subject is in course of preparation.

THE Government of India have requested the various local Governments to furnish them with their opinions on the question of the appointment of agents in England for procuring English stores and appliances required by Indian Port Trusts under the direct orders of the trustees.

It has been absolutely decided to abandon the contemplated Legislative Council meeting at Delhi over the Punjab Land Bills. These, it is found, will be much modified before being passed, the select committee not accepting the radical changes of system proposed by Sir Charles Aitchison.

RECOMMENDATIONS will be shortly submitted to the Secretary of State for forming United Burma into a Lieutenant-Governorship.

ORDERS will at once issue for the raising of a battalion of Military Police, 500 strong, at Manipur, for service in the Kobo Valley. The nucleus of this regiment will be formed by volunteers from the 42nd, 43rd, and 44th regiments of Gurkha Light Infantry and from the battalions of the Assam Frontier Police. In order to save time it is proposed to draft the men at once into the police, with their arms and clothing, just as they stand in their respective corps. The Military Police will relieve the 44th Gurkas of garrison duty at Tammu and Oktong, thus enabling the latter to return to Manipur.

THE garrison on the Lower Chindwin River are now in direct telegraphic communication with the Burma Field Force Head-quarters at Mandalay, a telegraph office having been opened at Ahlon.

THE Wuntho Tsawbwa has at last submitted, and the most serious obstacle that remained to the complete pacification of Upper Burma has thus been removed.

THE most important engagement with the dacoits in Upper Burma since the last Pioneer Mail was despatched is that in which Lieutenant Wapshare, with twenty-four lances of his regiment, the 3rd Cavalry, Hyderabad Contingent, after making a forced march on the 12th ult., came up with and routed 300 dacoits under the leadership of Boh Hantha, who, together with four other boh and a large number of their men, was killed. Kote Duffadar Afzul Hussain and four troopers of the regiment mentioned have been brought to notice for distinguished gallantry in this affair. There have also been a number of minor engagements, in most of which parties of the 1st Madras Lancers took part, and the dacoits were, of course, worsted.

It is expected that the whole of the new military police, numbering over 4,500 men, will have landed in Burma by the middle of this month. Between 1,500 and 2,000 sepoy recruited from the Native army are also being sent as police.

Notes of the Week.

MANY Anglo-Indians and many Natives of India will learn with deep regret the death of the Rev. James Long, who for many years did excellent work in Calcutta when stationed there as one of the representatives of the Church Missionary Society. We reproduce to-day a brief obituary notice written of him by the kindly hand of his friend, Mr. J. B. Knight, for the Indian Magazine. All that Mr. Knight says of the deceased will be fully endorsed by all who knew the man. There were several who knew him without understanding some of the hidden and brighter phases of his character, and who, perhaps, thought him self-opinionated, and holding extreme views on Indian questions. But those who knew him intimately could appreciate his genuineness and earnestness in whatever he took in hand to do. He did much good service for the Government of India, and the peoples of India had no more honest friend amongst Englishmen. He knew their weaknesses, but he also knew their better qualities, and was ever ready to assist in every movement for their real good.

His zeal in this respect was supposed at one time to have outrun his discretion when many years ago his translation of a Bengali drama, which represented the English Indigo Planters in an unfavourable light, drew upon him a prosecution, which entailed upon him a sentence of fine and imprisonment by the High Court of Calcutta. Mr. Knight does not touch upon this episode in his career, but he might have done so without scruple, for the incident, if not altogether forgotten, is not fraught with the memories of the bitter feelings which then had full sway. The great enemy of the Planters then was they believed Sir Ashley Eden—who was supposed to have instigated or encouraged Mr. Long in his literary labour against the Planters; but Sir Ashley has not only lived down the hatred then shown to him by that class but has won their respect and esteem—having shown himself a just and discriminating ruler when he had full power in Bengal. The whirligig of time brought in his revenges in Mr. Long's favour also, but he had left India before this change of feeling came about. He has died, however, respected and regretted by even old enemies.

SIR A. R. THOMPSON has handed over the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal to Sir S. Bayley, and left India for England. An Anglo-Indian journal sums up the characteristics of the late Lieutenant-Governor as "balance of mind, practical wisdom, common sense, sobriety of judgment, and moderation." Praise of a ruler could not be higher.

UPON the same day Sir C. Aitchison handed over the reins of the Punjab to Sir J. Lyall. Regarding the former the Times correspondent takes upon himself to say, "His great ability, experience, and strong sense of duty are universally admitted; but he does not appear to have succeeded in making himself generally popular, and his administration has been somewhat of a disappointment—a fact which is, perhaps, largely due to circumstances for which he is not to blame."

THE above is charmingly naïve and self-complacent, but the sad thing about it is that people who don't judge for themselves, and they are many, are prone to accept the words of a barrister telegraphing the gossip of the Bengal Club to the Times during a leisure hour of a Sunday afternoon as a true reflex of Indian public opinion. It is thus that Indian official reputations often suffer. Sir C. Aitchison's good service in the Punjab has caused his presence to be invited on the Supreme Council, whose his experience and judgment will perhaps be better appreciated.

THE DEWAN OF INDORE has been thanked by Sir Lepel Griffin for a lecture which he delivered against infant marriages amongst the Hindoos. Sir Lepel said that the English law which compelled Rukmibhai to go to her husband against her will was a disgrace and an outrage upon human society. "In conclusion," says the telegram, "he advised his Hindoo friends, if they wished to occupy a high position in the world, to treat women well."

THE Sultan of Johore, who made many friends in England during his visits to this country, has been recognised since his accession as an enlightened ruler, and one most anxious to develop the resources of his territory to the fullest extent. He has lands of virgin soil specially suited for the growth of tobacco, pepper, and many other valuable products; there are forests of primeval timber, including teak, ironwood, india-rubber, and various other tropical and valuable woods; the fibrous plants known as "Rhea" and "Mhoova," which are used as substitutes for cotton, flax and wool—the former being also employed for mixing with silk—are indigenous to the soil. The wealth which the development of the various industries in connection with these products would produce would be great, but hitherto the difficulty has been to attract foreign capital to the scene. This difficulty is now likely to be overcome, judging from a prospectus, which will be found amongst our advertisements to-day, of "The Johore Company, Limited." In this Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, and the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, invite subscriptions towards the necessary capital for acquiring certain valuable concessions obtained from the Sultan of Johore by Mr. Keswick, of the well-known firm of Jardine, Matheson and Company, comprising the right to select 100,000 acres of land (an area of upwards of 156 square miles) in the territory of Johore and Muar in the Malay Peninsula, distant about ninety miles from Singapore. Upwards of 80,000 acres, believed to be the choicest and most valuable land in the territory, have, it is stated, been already selected, and the Company intends to work on the lines of the Deli Maatschappij Company, which has just declared a dividend for last year of no less than 137 per cent. The Prospectus of "The Johore Company" gives very detailed explanations for intending investors, and, coming out under the high auspices it does, it should be not only a great commercial success, but the bringer of wealth and prosperity to England's staunch and loyal friend, the Sultan of Johore and his people.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 3.

The Budget has evoked very little criticism or discussion, probably because no old taxes are remitted and no new taxes are imposed. Such expressions of opinion as have appeared in various newspapers are, however, by no means unanimous. The Calcutta Englishman congratulates Sir A. Colvin on having produced as satisfactory a Budget as could be expected out of unfavourable materials. The Bombay Gazette says that, in spite of much which emphasises every call to prudence, the Budget gives one more proof that on the whole the financial condition of India is sound. The Times of India, on the other hand, describes it as a makeshift, and says the two ends have been drawn together by hook and by crook, but that not the slightest effort is apparent to grapple with the real difficulties of Indian finance. The Indian Daily News of Calcutta says the Budget confirms the conviction that the abolition of the cotton import duties was a gross injustice to India.

The use which Sir A. Colvin has made of the Famine Insurance Fund to obviate a deficit seems to be generally approved. The Calcutta Statesman thinks that the Government wisely recognised the illusory character of that fund, and the Allahabad Pioneer holds that Sir A. Colvin rightly determined to discard a fiction.

The new provincial contracts, which will secure to the Imperial Government over half a million at the expense of the provincial Government, have not been so well received. The Pioneer, while not wishing to be hard on the Supreme Government in its present difficulties, feels strongly that this crippling of the local Governments is most unfortunate, and that such a policy is incompatible with the healthy development of provincial administration.

The investment by the Gwalior Regency of 3½ crores of rupees in Indian Government securities is generally admitted to be a very important event. It is well known that many of the Indian princes have large amounts of hoarded treasures lying idle, and it is to be hoped that this example set by the Regency may tend to induce them to turn those treasures to purposes useful to themselves and the country.

The Budget has had little effect upon the local money market or the rate of exchange, and there appears to be a general opinion that such depressing effect as it may have had will not be lasting.

The Viceroy, after a successful shooting trip with the Maharajah of Durbungah, proceeded on Wednesday to open the new railway bridge over the river Gunduck, a work which connects the Tirhoot railway with Bengal and the north-western system, and thereby gives an unbroken length of 656 miles of metre-gauge line through the trans-Gangetic districts of Bengal and the North-Western Provinces. Lord Dufferin, in declaring the bridge open, said the event was one which would be appreciated throughout India by all concerned in the commerce of the country.

It is notified that the Government has directed the addition of the following troops to the Bengal army:—Three battalions of Sikh Infantry, to be numbered 35, 36, and 37; one Pioneer battalion to be called the 34th Pioneers, and to be united with the two existing pioneer Battalions; one battalion of Goorkhas, to form a second battalion of the 3rd Goorkhas, and one squadron of cavalry, to be added to the Guides Corps.

The Governor of Bombay unveiled a statue of Sir Richard Temple at Bombay on Thursday. He said he hoped that the Civil Service would in future boast many men equal to Sir R. Temple in personal energy, unflinching industry, and versatility.

BELOOCHISTAN.

On Monday the Duchess of Connaught, in the presence of the Duke and General Roberts, formally opened the bridge over the Chappar rift, the greatest piece of engineering on the Scinde-Pishin railway. The bridge is to be named after her Royal Highness, the Louise Margaret bridge.

BURMA.

RANGOON, APRIL 3.

It has been found necessary to strengthen the Burma Secretariat, and the department will, it is believed, be completely re-organized. The appointment of Mr. Smeaton, Director of Agriculture in the North-Western Provinces, as Chief Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, has been very well received in Rangoon. The office of Chief Secretary is a new one in Burma. Mr. Smeaton has already had some experience in Burma, having served some time in Lower Burma. For the next few months he will reside in Mandalay, and represent the Chief Commissioner in Upper Burma.

Mr. Crosthwaite is taking vigorous measures to restore order in the lower province, which in some districts has been scarcely less disturbed than Upper Burma. He has sanctioned the employment of a considerable extra police force for the turbulent district of Tharawaddy. For months past this district has been the scene of serious outrages and constant affrays. A state of things little short of civil war has prevailed there between the loyal Karens and the Burmese marauders.

Lieutenant McSwiney, of the 3rd Cavalry of the Hyderabad Contingent, who has distinguished himself by attacking the dacoits in the Schwebo district, and who has had considerable experience in Upper Burmah, recommends the formation of a corps of irregular cavalry, 1,000 strong, for service in Upper Burma, the men to consist of Native cavalry, recruited from the ranks of the Native cavalry regiments in India. The regiment would be mounted on Burmese ponies. Lieutenant McSwiney says that, if permission were given to the Native officers of the proposed corps, many would bring over to Burma a large following of their own, and eventually form small military colonies on the completion of their term of service.

A FORMIDABLE VOLUNTEER.—A Calcutta paper, in describing the recent assault-at-arms in Calcutta, says of the wrestling on horseback:—"The last event on the programme was the bare-backed wrestling, six men a-side, Calcutta Mounted Rifles against P-3 R. A., which provoked much merriment. The C. M. R. had been at it before, and they had one man on their side who was a tower of strength, six feet four inches in height, and strong in proportion. At the first onslaught he lifted two men clean off their horses, and was then able to help his friends, who were hard pushed. In a few minutes, however, they were got rid of, leaving three men of the C. M. R. on their horses to claim the victory."

THE HORSE SUPPLY IN INDIA.

(Times of India.)

Major Humfrey and Colonel Tweedie are local writers well-known to our readers in connection with the important question of the "Horse-supply in India." The first is anxious that Government should go in largely for country-breeds; the second advocates the establishment of nurseries, in which Arab colts, picked up cheap at a very early age, could be reared and trained. A writer in Blackwood's Magazine, who is evidently an expert like the other two, maintains, on the other hand, that the most important source of horse-supply for the present army of India is Australia. "There can," he says, "be no doubt that, taking them all round, the Australians, or Walers, are now the best horses in India." The horses found in the ranks of the Indian Army are generally arranged under five heads—as Arabs, Persians, Northerns, country-breeds, and Australians or Walers. Formerly many very sturdy horses came from the Cape; and latterly an attempt has been made to import Hungarian horses from Trieste. But this effort, though the horses are cheap for their quality, is still in the experimental stage. In the old days most of the horses required for the army in Bombay and Bengal were purchased in the Arab stables of Bombay. The horses for the Madras Army were landed at Mangalore, and marched across country to a remount depot near Bangalore. But owing partly to the restrictions put by the Turks on all export of horses from Arabia, and partly to the new Government regulations on this side, the supply of Arab horses to the Southern Presidency has entirely ceased. The writer in Blackwood, though he owns that the general run of Arab horses are first-rate, thinks that they are too small to prove satisfactory mounts to any but Native cavalry. Persian horses are, however, among the most useful remounts in India, whether for cavalry or for gun teams. They have more power and size than Arabs, with much of the same constitutional good qualities, and—a matter of great importance to the State—they are generally cheaper in price. But the available supply is small, and it is virtually limited to the Bombay Army. The writer does not seem to be aware that Colonel Ben Williams, the head of the Indian Remount Department, has lately been travelling in Persia making arrangements for a much larger future supply of Persian horses. If his suggestions can be carried into effect we are likely to hear a good deal more of the Persian horse as a remount.

The "Northern" horses used to come in large numbers from one of the two great markets for Asiatic horses, Herat and Cabul. This source of supply was interrupted during the Afghan War, and has since been strangely neglected by the Government. It might easily be revived, and especially, if possible, for the class of Northerners known as "Turcomans," that splendid and enduring race of Arabs, which, from the peculiarities of the soil, now equal English thoroughbreds in size and resemble them in appearance." All Indian travellers in Turkestan have been of opinion that the horses of the Tekke Turcomans have no equals for war service, and many years since Colonel Baker said, "It is singular that the magnificent breed which is to be found in such numbers among the Turcomans has never made its way on any large scale into Hindustan." They are now naturally drifting into the hands of Russia, but still the horses of Northern Persia are of much the same breed, and these should be available either via Herat, or through Bushire or Bunder Abbas on the Persian Gulf. Of the country breeds, the Kattywars were probably the best of the old distinct races of the country, marked as they were by extraordinary powers of endurance. But the breed has not been maintained in its original purity. It is to the revival of this breed that Major Humfrey has devoted his best energies, and he has already succeeded in gaining for country-breeds some important racing concessions, which are likely to stimulate private breeders. But Major Humfrey would agree most warmly with the writer in Blackwood that "if success in horse-breeding in India is to be looked for on any great scale, it must be due to the efforts of the English Government—and it is no new thing that this subject should be considered of the highest importance; and the power of providing in the country to a great extent for the wants of its own army has always been looked upon as a most desirable object to be attained." In the old times the stud department provided horses of great endurance and blood. Sufficient numbers were produced to mount the British cavalry and artillery in the North-West Province, and we are now told that, as a proof of their good qualities, that as late as 1870 there were still to be found efficient animals in artillery teams which had taken their part, and done their duty well, in the long marches and severe work of the Mutiny campaigns. The Nizam is trying some interesting experiments, and is understood to have bred a few very good horses, and fair remounts for Native cavalry have been bred at the Coongul farm in Mysore. There are few ways in which the Native chiefs can be of better service to the Government than by devoting a portion of their ample means to horse-breeding, and few more pleasant. Our writer, however, differs essentially from Major Humfrey in thinking "it is very doubtful whether, under present Government arrangements, horse-breeding in India will ever produce the desired result of a permanent and trustworthy supply of good animals." And for that reason he looks chiefly towards Australia.

The importation of Australian horses into India only dates back a little over thirty years, and at first they bore a bad character. They were coarse, wild, ragged-looking, long-legged animals, with curiously exaggerated powers of buck-jumping. But gradually a class of middlemen has sprung up in Australia, who, though they keep large runs, are not breeders. They purchase the young stock, feed them on the grass-lands, handle them and train them, and then sell them to shippers for the Indian market. They perform the exact functions that Colonel Tweedie wishes the Indian Government to undertake in Arabia itself, and their success in Australia is a point in his favour. The principal shippers engaged in the horse trade between Australia and Calcutta are Weekes, Baldock, Warran, Vanrenan, Cavanagh, and Hunder, and between Australia and Madras Kcrouse, Madden, Learmonth, Gidney, and others. The trade is believed to be a very profitable one, and the late John Wilson, the circus proprietor, dabbled in it to very good account. The horses are now generally carried in steamers, not in sailing ships, and arrangements are often made to allow the sick horses to lie on sawdust beds, a plan that has not yet been attempted in the Arab horse trade from the Persian Gulf. The average price paid by the Australian shippers is a trade secret. But it cannot exceed from £15 to £20 all round. The Government limit for the purchase of Australian remounts has been lately raised to £50 sterling. They rarely find their way into the ranks of the Native army. But, says our writer, "to carry the sturdy English dragoon, or to take their places in the teams of horse or field artillery, it would be hard, even in Europe, to find animals more suitable." On the other hand, they are exotics, and require to be carefully acclimatised. But, if they are well fed and well cared for, they are physically superior to Asiatic horses, just as Europeans are physically superior to Asiatics. Everything depends on the manner in which they are acclimatised, and this has only of late years been carefully studied. There is little doubt, we are told, that no army in the world is better mounted than that of India is, in its normal condition. But, if a time of pressure arise, we should have to depend almost mainly on the animals now in private hands. The writer says that there is only one plan feasible, that a number of horses equal to one year's requirements should always be kept in reserve at the depôts, in addition to the remounts for the current year. These horses he would apparently obtain from Australia. We venture to think, however, that he does not lay enough stress either on the importance of country-bred stud farms or the possibility of a greatly increased supply of large-boned horses from Persia. The question is one of great importance. Asia is the land of mounted warriors, and in all its historic struggles and conquests crowds of horsemen have ever taken a distinguished part. It is also the land of enormous distances, and it may be readily conceived, as he puts it, "with what magnitude the question of horse-supply shows in the eyes of the military chiefs and organisers of India."

THE SILVER QUESTION.

(Statesman.)

If the low prices which prevail in Europe in consequence of the appreciation of gold had produced high prices in India, we could understand that India was greatly advantaged by the present state of things, as in that case India would be selling her produce at high prices, while buying foreign commodities at low ones. It is because prices in India have either remained stationary, or shown a tendency to fall in the last few years, in spite of those prices being in silver, that we find it impossible to accept the paradox that India has benefited by the fall. But there is another consideration to be borne in mind. It is impossible for anyone to tell what the effects of the free coinage of silver since 1872-3—when Germany began the disastrous crusade against the metal—might not have had upon India as in all other countries. All we know is that the paralysis which has fallen upon the commerce and industry of the world developed itself almost suddenly about that time. At first, and for some time afterwards, "the depression of trade," as it was called, was accepted everywhere, as simply one of those ebb tides which seem to follow, as by a law of nature upon every great flood of prosperity that we witness. From the recovery of 1866 down to 1874 was a period, we suppose, of unrivalled prosperity. In the memorable words of Mr. Gladstone, trade was advancing "by leaps and bounds." Commerce had struck its roots deep in all soils. A great overshadowing tree had grown up, with its branches spreading over all lands: its fruits enriching all people. The growth is suddenly arrested, the great boughs and branches begin to droop, the foliage to lose its freshness, and the fruit to fall or wither. The gigantic tree is still there, spreading its branches as widely, and casting a shadow as deep as before, but its vigour and health are gone. There is something the matter with the tree. The bi-metallists say that there is a worm at the root of it, depriving it of half the wonted sap it has hitherto drawn from a soil which has been drained of one-half the fertilising stream that used to nourish the roots. The trade and industry of the world have been sick and pining for the last thirteen years, and no one can tell why.

Now the point is this, that no economic science we possess can tell us what the state of this great, widespread fruitful tree—what the state of trade and industry to-day would have been—but for the check that has brought us to this stand. For anything opponents can affirm to the contrary, the trade and industry of all lands would have been progressing still to this hour, by leaps and bounds, but for the arrest laid upon both by the sudden disappearance of the motive power which set the whole in action. The machinery is still there, and the engines are working as of yore, but one-half the horse-power is gone, until the machinery in some cases is near standing still. No man can tell what the state of India, what the state of the world might not have been to-day, but for the arrest laid upon it by the vital changes made in the currency arrangements of the west. Imagine for a moment that the bimetallists are right, and that it has been the contraction of the currency of the world, by the exclusion of silver therefrom, that has been the real cause of the arrest laid upon its industry and commerce. Who can estimate its results? By the supposition, we are to accept it as a fact, that but for this step the course of prosperity which the industrial and commercial world had enjoyed, almost without a break, for the previous quarter of a century, would have lasted without interruption to this hour; but who can estimate what its position, what the position of India, might have been at this moment. Instead of thirteen long years of depression and discouragement, the nations would have made thirteen years of progress by 'leaps and bounds,' such as marked the previous twenty-five years. It is impossible to say what the position of the world might not have been, or what the increase of its material wealth and well-being. Let the estimates be of as lowly an order as we please, it will hardly be denied that the whole world of industry and trade would to-day have reached a position indefinitely in advance of what we now see around us. Who can say what the position of India itself might not have been, if instead of making the problematic gain she is supposed, by the mercantile theory, to have made at the cost of her neighbours, she had shared with them, in the increased gains of all, as the result of their prosperity. The Americans tell us that the competition of Indian wheat with their own staple is ruining them; but does India gain anything by the price of wheat having fallen to 30s. a quarter when it might have been 45s. Would it not have been to the advantage of India as well as America that the price should have been 45s. still? If the bi-metallists are right, we say it is simply impossible to estimate the losses which have been suffered by all lands in common from this artificial contraction of the world's currency. To suppose that India has escaped her share of the loss, simply because we are unable to trace its course, is folly itself. If there is any truth whatever in economic science, the gain of one nation is the gain of all. How can producers grow wealthy, while consumers are becoming poorer every year. The prosperity of the producer (industry) and of the trader (the distributor of that industry) will be measured by the prosperity of the consuming classes of all nations dependent upon that industry. Take India itself as an illustration of our meaning, and let us suppose that of her 250 millions of people, 50 millions may be classed as mainly consumers who find their power of purchasing reduced by the lessening of their incomes. The loss passes on to the 200 million producers, who share therein to the full. The truth is that the effects of any great change in the currency arrangements of the world, are so widespread and so intricate, that it is impossible to follow them. We know only that a rise in the exchange value of the money of the world, through the contraction of its volume, or any other cause, must weigh down the springs of industry, and that "rising" prices are indissolubly associated with prosperity, from the common experience of mankind.

AFFAIRS IN NEPAL.

(Pioneer.)

There has been some excitement in Khatmandu lately, owing to a rumoured conspiracy to oust the present Government. It would seem that some 200 men gathered at Raksul, about twenty miles north of our old military station at Segowlie, and though unarmed, their presence caused alarm, as large stores of arms and ammunition were said to be stored in the neighbourhood. Seventeen hundred sepoy were said to have deserted from the Nepal Army and to be marching on Raskul, there to await General Ranabir Jung, son of Jung Bahadur. This prince is a refugee in India, and never conceals his intention of trying his fortune some time or other in Nepal, from which he was driven when the coup d'état some two years ago took place. He had been at Segowlie lately, but on February 19 was at Motihari. He was arrested there by our police, news of the impending conspiracy having been sent to India from Khatmandu. The after course of events showed the danger more imaginary than real. The 1,700 sepoys have never been heard of, so that part of the story is discredited; while as to the 200 unarmed men at Raksul, if they were really waiting for Ranabir Jung, they have since returned to their homes. The stores of arms and ammunition, too, have not been found. Ranabir has been taken to Patna, and there released, on his promise not to leave that place without permission; and the threatened storm has blown over.

SOME INDIAN PESTS.

(Madras Mail.)

In Indian climes full many a pest Destroys man's temper, breaks his rest :
Makes vengeful feelings in him rise
While for escape he vainly tries.

Day after day, night after night,
Fresh troubles loom upon his sight ;
And as they hourly ever come,
He soon forgets worse ones at home.

I need not tell the eye-fly's grace,
As he flits past your weary face,
His tiny form you scarce descrie,
Until he's nestling in your eye.

And no one who within his bed
Has heard that buzz around his head,
Or felt the striped mosquito's sting
Will ask me more his praise to sing.

Of snakes and scorpions, ants and more
Of such-like crawling pests galore,
Were I to tell, I ne'er could say
My tale within a single day.

But yet of these 'tis surely true,
That 'tis their custom so to do ;
They only act as nature shows,
Who bids them look on men as foes.

And knowing this, if these were all One's troubles, one would hardly call Them very bad : but worse are there
And in them you must surely share.

The servants ! Ah ! they're troubles sad,
The lazy butler, chokra bad,
The lying dog-boy, truthful ayah
Who, like the others, is a liar.

The syces who in weather cold,
Themselves within the horse jhools fold,
Their spouses, who until they're caught
Bring for the horse grass "plenty short."

The cook, who lies, and drinks, and steals,
The dhole, who despite appeals
Tears off the buttons from your shirts,
And frays and rends your cuffs and skirts.

Scarce have you caught your chokra tripping,
And eased your mind by "making whipping"
And vowed you'll keep him on no more,
When a dull crash upon the floor

Tells you six plates have "done gone phut,"
"As on the shelf I try to put Them. See, Sar ! shelf quick going away
That plenty bad shelf, butler say."

And while he writhes his injured body,
The cook is sily drinking toddy ;
And when the dinner hour's arrived,
You find yourself thro' it deprived

Of half your dinner : thro' his freak
The fish is cold, and burned your steak,
With oranges he's made the curry :
And iced the soup in maudlin flurry.

Thus you go on from day to day
You get a treasure, hope he'll stay,
"My mother dying, Sar, give leave,
Boy never wanting to deceive.

I coming back." But when he's gone
Not he but you have cause to mourn,
And in your justly wrathful ire
Like David say, each man's a liar.

These, then, the troubles which beset
Us here, and they can best be met
By firmness tempered much with kindness,
By seeing much, and yet by blindness.

And when at length back home we go
And there domestic troubles know, Much would we give once more to hear
"One anna charge commission, Sar."

TRAVELLER.

INCREASE OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

(Pioneer.)

The list of officers appointed to the five new regiments now about to be added to the Native Army will probably not be issued for some little time to come, particularly as it is likely that the three high-caste Sikh battalions will be raised slowly owing to the recruitment of police for Burma. The new Pioneer regiment of Muzbi Sikhs will be linked with the 23rd and 32nd Pioneers, and will presumably be numbered thirty-four. There will be but little difficulty felt in raising Muzbis, who know they will always be among their caste brethren, and have fixed stations where they can make their homes. The other three new battalions can well be numbered 35th, 36th, 37th, and linked together as class regiments. The Bengal Infantry will then be numbered from the 1st to the 45th, with one exception—the 41st are still missing from the list. The raising of the 2nd Battalion of the 3rd Gurkhas will give us ten battalions of Gurkhas in addition to the three regiments of Gurkha Light Infantry stationed in Assam. The 18th Bengal Infantry will no doubt send the Gurkhas in its ranks to the 2nd Battalion of the 3rd Gurkhas, as no further recruiting of Gurkhas in outside regiments is to be allowed. The promotions which will naturally follow upon the raising of the new regiments mentioned above will make the prospects of young majors and captains of the Bengal Staff Corps brighter than they have ever been since the Staff Corps was formed. The other day we pointed out that sixteen commands would fall vacant this year, and that in the next four or five years a very large number would fall in; and this was without counting on new regiments being raised. The fifty-two years' age-limit and the seven years' rule have begun to operate with full force, and the flow of promotion is rapid in the extreme. There should be no difficulty in obtaining probationers for the Staff Corps now, if young officers only recognise how quickly they can rise in the regiments to which they are posted. The difficulty which the Government will sooner or later have to face, particularly in the Bengal Army, is in the matter of providing for ex-commandants, who are becoming very numerous. They can, it is true, go home on a pension of £700 per annum, but then the pension list will swell to a size that the financial authorities will take alarm at. There are only a limited number of brigades and station commands available, and it is highly probable that the number of brigades will shortly be reduced.

THOUGHTS AFTER THE JUBILEE.

(Pioneer.)

Returning from the coronation of the Queen, Greville notes in his diary of 1838 that "the great merit of the coronation is that so much has been done for the people: to amuse and interest them seems to have been the main object." The second coronation, if so it may be styled of Her Majesty in her Eastern realms, at which we have been assisting, has on the whole been conceived in very much the same spirit. To amuse and interest the people has in most places been the general object aimed at; and to judge from the reports which are rapidly pouring in from all quarters, this end has been reasonably attained. In some localities the first arrangements for the Jubilee were conceived in too bureaucratic and prosaic a spirit. Municipal Committees are not exempt from the defects of their virtues. For years the distinction between productive and unproductive expenditure has been sternly drilled into them by a hard-headed Government, and they have learnt from bitter experience that any provision for fireworks or nautiches, or even for feeding beggars, in the local budget is certain to get them into trouble with the controlling authorities. It is not surprising if on so exceptional an occasion as the Jubilee they could not entirely free themselves from these generally wholesome maxims of economy, and failed to realise that the most appropriate way of celebrating the event was to give the people plenty of "cakes and ale." Public libraries, drinking fountains, hospitals, schools, and clock-towers are all praiseworthy objects of municipal ambition, and it was natural that the councillor, with an eye to the embellishment and improvement of his native town, should see at the first suggestion of a subscription a chance of pushing on some one of his pet schemes. But a great day cannot be stamped in the national heart by increased expenditure on bricks and mortar. The millions whose dim consciousness the statesman on such occasions seeks to awaken to the significance of the moment are absolutely untouched by such activity. Their days are dull, their thoughts narrow, their hopes faint. The landmarks in their lives are some great marriage at which they ate their fill, or a fair, a bathing day, a pilgrimage. To insert a political milestone among these local landmarks we must appeal to the same class of feelings. We must give the masses a spectacle, or a feed, or, better still, both. Works of utility may be superadded at pleasure, but they cannot take the place of panem et circenses.

Happily for India, the second thoughts of Municipal Corporations recognised this fact, and in most localities something has been done to please and amuse the people. Nor has the Government been behindhand in respect of funds, or niggard as regards other benefits which lie exclusively within its powers. The effect of a jail delivery in a country like India is extremely difficult to estimate. Many inmates are unquestionably resigned to State-provided food and lodgings, and are not grateful for being unexpectedly thrust again upon "the rough edge of the bare world." To other occupants of our jails the day of release is a day of rejoicing, and these may be trusted to carry to their homes an indistinct sense of gratitude to the Sovereign who has set them free. The release of imprisoned debtors by payment of their debts was a happy idea, though the scope of its operation was perhaps unnecessarily restricted. In point of originality, however, our Government has been distinctly beaten by not a few of the Native chiefs and feudatories, whose arrangements must be admitted to reflect the highest praise on their loyalty and good sense, and who are less hampered by financial and economic considerations than the rulers of British India.

The question whether the Jubilee has been a success raises the further question: What in this particular case is meant by success? The demonstrations everywhere have proved two things: they prove the existence of thoroughly loyal feelings among a large section of the educated Native community; and they also prove the completeness and efficiency of the official machinery by which the country is governed. The intention of the Viceroy and his advisers was to leave the initiative everywhere to the people. In practice it was found that, with the exception of the Presidency towns, official help and encouragement were needed to induce the people to "demonstrate." The fact to some may be disappointing, but to most people it appears inevitable. The reasons are not far to seek. To say nothing of the Oriental idea that to take the first step in public matters is the duty of the ruling power, we have to admit the absence of a sufficient stimulus to enthusiasm. Personal attachment to a ruler is in any country an extremely rare and delicate plant. The ruler must be personally known; he must command popular sympathy and admiration by striking personal qualities; and he must make his presence felt constantly and systematically among all classes of his subjects. Even in England there are to this day numbers of people whose idea of their Queen is of the vaguest kind; who know nothing of her history, nothing of her virtues; and who are absolutely indifferent as to the extent of her reign. What is to be expected from the masses of the Indian population? They have never seen their ruler, they do not even know her name, and they are absolutely unrelated to her by any of the ties that in petty kingdoms bind peasant and prince together. The only ruler they know is the impersonal entity which they call the Sirkar, and which to their pantheistic imagination seems to animate every individual representative of the governing power. To look for the warm glow of loyalty, as we understand the word, in such a country and in such conditions, is absurd. The Jubilee had to be official, or it would not have taken place at all. But even as an official demonstration it has not been without value. It has served as a sort of political education to the people; it has roused their curiosity and made them look with more interest on the face that is stamped on the familiar rupee. And in these ways it has touched the national consciousness with the humanising thought that the ruling power is a sentient, suffering, sympathising mortal, and not an unpitiable, resistless, and untiring machine, working in ways akin to the blind forces of the natural world.

NATIVES IN CIVIL EMPLOY.

(Englishman.)

"Two Consuls and two Tribunes have worked [well enough in old times," Lord Dalhousie admitted to Henry Lawrence in discussing his plans for the administration of newly annexed Oude, but for modern times and modern needs he thought the duplex system impossible. It was only natural that such a system should offend the instincts of the great Viceroy, to whom centralisation and unification meant increased opportunity for a frank use and enjoyment of power, of personal rule, of a knowledge of and control over all public work that was worth knowing and controlling. Those were the days of Resumption, when the existence of Native States was regarded with something of impatience, when a Native ruler who was slothful, or imbecile, or drunken, or who lacked lawful heirs, knew that it was but a question of time when his name as Raja or as Nawab should cease out of the land. We now live in times more sentimental, more merciful. Centralisation has, as was inevitable, enlarged its bounds, and has made the machine of State act with a more mechanical uniformity than ever. The disturbing elements nowadays are from without, not from within; changes of administration are prompted, not so much by the zeal and intelligence of public servants who see their way to the lightening of public loads, as by the pressure of an impalpable but irresistible public opinion in India and in England. And one of the changes which is being forced upon us is the admission of Natives to a larger share of power and pay.

It is commonly said that Natives are better fitted now than before to occupy positions of emolument and trust, and the agitation in their favour is attributed to a growing public sense of their greater and growing fitness. And it must be admitted that a daily growing number of Natives, especially in Lower Bengal, is becoming tinctured with the English learning, is growing superior to the ancient prejudices—to all prejudices—is daily more clamorous for a share in the loaves and fishes. And with a democracy at home daily more obtrusive and more powerful, our rulers here cannot but recognise the corresponding change which has come over Indian society, and endeavour to find room for the more active Indian youth of to-day. But it is a little early to assume that young India is more fit for rule than its forefathers were. It is true that the growth of centralisation, the multiplication of laws, the amelioration of manners, the improvement of communications has made Government much more a thing of routine and of a patient and plodding attention to detail than it was fifty years ago. For subordinate posts in such a régime as this we need little beyond average honesty and average intelligence, and such industry as will do the day's work in the day. It may readily be assumed that educated Natives possess such qualities as these, and are, therefore, well qualified to sit on the bench and to direct the counsels of the new local boards. But, after all, it is something of an assumption—an assumption which disregards the effect of inherited and acquired drawbacks, and hastens to apply the test of actual experience without providing any safeguards against failure. There are, of course, the checks of the centralising system which has grown up in the course of more than a century of British rule, the system of reports and returns which the Salaries Commission propose, probably in vain, to mitigate. But these are checks which owe their efficacy chiefly to administrative honesty.

It must not be forgotten that we, as foreigners, and, for the most part, picked foreigners, must of necessity find it easier to be honest than the people of the country. We have no local ties, and therefore no local temptations. We look solely and wholly to our official superiors for advancement in rank and in rupees. We owe our official position never to popular, and rarely to private influence. Will all this be equally true of Natives of the country when they are more largely admitted to the public service, and when their admission works the inevitable result of making the service more popular, more democratic, more subservient, in a word, to public opinion? Might not the Public Service Commission find a way out of its difficulties by reiterating Lord Dalhousie's words, and saying that, as "two Consuls and two Tribunes have worked well enough in old times," so they might be tried in modern India, one of the administrative twins being a European, the other a Native? At least the experiment might be tried. And this brings us to the gist of what we have to say. The Public Service Commission has collected a vast mass of opinion, much of it rudis indigestaque moles, of very little value, because it is not based upon experience. It has raised sanguine hopes, and must needs inflict much undeserved disappointment upon many worthy persons. The problem it has to solve is that of the larger admission of Natives to the public service, and it has recorded many and multiplex opinions as to the best means to that end. Who shall decide among so many councillors? Many, it is true, are but as flocks of sheep following a trusted bellwether, and the number of resulting opinions will probably not be very large. It is a well-known Native proverb that when one jackal howls a chorus is not wanting, and the application is not hard to find in our experience of public opinion in India or in England. But why should not the resulting opinions, or such of them as seem to be practical and sensible, be exposed to the test of speedy experiment? What could be easier than to make one or two districts training schools for Native Administrators?

Let a district in which the work of administration is comparatively easy, or, better still, is exposed to the maximum of public criticism, be given over to Natives. Let them at first be under the control of a picked magistrate and collector, a man known to possess the intuitive sympathy with, and comprehension of Natives which, we are glad to believe, has not altogether been stamped out by centralisation. Let the civil surgeon, the joint-magistrate, the district superintendent, the engineer, all be Natives. Let them understand that they, too, are picked men, and that upon their behaviour depends the entrance of others of their kind into the services. Two or three years of experience of the working of such a district would furnish a basis for administrative reform vastly more useful than the record of any number of à priori opinions. The joint-magistrate might hope, as the system succeeded, to obtain the charge of the district in place of the Englishman, who ought to be proud to be entrusted with an experiment so interesting. It can hardly be said that the experiment would be dangerous; it is being tried in a scattered, tentative way all over India. We find here a Native civil surgeon, and there a Native joint-magistrate, struggling against social difficulties, but, for the most part, doing good work. With what access of encouragement and hope might not such men work under such a system as we have pointed out! A step such as this, even on the smallest scale, would prove a much more acceptable sop to the popular mouth than any amount of blue-book literature. It may be said that the suggestion does not rid us of the difficulty as to the appointment of Natives to the services. That it does not do so directly must be candidly admitted. But the success of such an experiment, and we may safely assume that in greater or less measure it would succeed, would clear away many of the obstacles to a solution. Men appointed by competition and by nomination would work side by side, the best examples of each being selected for the experiment, and practical experience would show whether men who have passed examinations in Calcutta are as trustworthy as men who have gone through the ordeal of the Civil Service Commissioners in London. Possibly the result would show that the mere system of appointment matters little, and that, given an absence of nepotism and favouritism, the best men will contrive to get to the front under any fair system. These suggestions are not uttered ex cathedra. The subject is a difficult one, and the Commission will find it no easy matter to evolve some working scheme out of the enormous pile of irresponsible opinion which they have collected. They may well be thankful for any suggestions, honestly conceived and plainly expressed, which may lead to a practical solution, short of the mere cutting of the Gordian knot at whose strands they are picking. They are gathering "golden opinions from all sorts of men." The true difficulty will be to apply them in a way that may be considered satisfactory.

DOCTOR OF ORIENTAL LEARNING.

(Bombay Gazette.)

On the principle of locus a non lucendo, Sir Charles Aitchison is to be made a "Doctor of Oriental Learning" by the University of which he is the ex-officio Chancellor as the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. In future, we have no doubt that every Viceroy and every Chancellor of that University will be unable to escape that distinction. A Native proverb says that "to whom God gives a great office He also gives the great learning necessary to it," and so we suppose that in time, as Universities multiply, every person above the rank of Collector will blossom out as a Doctor, like the young Chief of Gondal, who, however, is actually studying medicine at the University of Edinburgh. Printer's devils sometimes confound the D.O.L. of Oxford with the D.O.L. of the Punjab University, but they need not be blamed. It has been alleged that the D.O.L. would have been more discriminately conferred on the first half-a-dozen lawyers passing through Temple Bar on any given day than in the selection sometimes made by the University of Oxford. It has similarly been left to the Punjab University to confer its distinctive title of D.O.L. on one who has taken his part in almost destroying its distinguishing feature of being mainly an Oriental University.

BENGAL.

THE subscriptions to the Countess of Dufferin's Fund now amount to Rs. 1,47,871.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal will preside at the forthcoming Silk Conference at Calcutta, and Sir Edward Buck will attend on behalf of the Government of India.

A FAREWELL address to Sir Rivers Thompson, bearing testimony to his long and varied services in India, and to the impartiality and success of his administrative work, has been signed by the residents of Calcutta without regard to class or creed.

A CALCUTTA paper says that the complaint that Mahomedans are not admitted in sufficient numbers to the public service does not, at any rate, apply to the Opium Department. A return, specially ordered by the Government, shows that a fair proportion of them have been for some time employed in this department, where they have worked with satisfactory results.

ONE of the Native convicts who were released on the occasion of the Jubilee celebrations was committed to take his trial at the next Alipore Criminal Sessions on the 3rd instant, on a charge of housebreaking and theft at Bhowanipur. The accused, who pleaded guilty, stated that he had no alternative left but to criminate himself so as to get back to jail, as he was not only without the means of subsistence, but his efforts to obtain pecuniary relief to proceed to his country had entirely failed.

WITH a view to stimulating the sale of Indian tea in America and Canada, a South Sylhet tea planter has submitted a scheme to the Indian Tea Association by which consumers will be able to purchase tea direct from the producers. This gentleman undertakes to ship tea direct from Calcutta at his own risk and cost, and asks by way of financial support a subsidy from the association for advertising purposes equal to half an anna per acre under tea. The South Sylhet Tea Association and the Indian Tea Association both favour the project.

THE Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University was able to announce to the Senate that the University of Oxford had consented under certain conditions, to arrangements enabling students from the affiliated colleges of the Calcutta University to take their B.A. degree in two years. Negotiations are also on foot, a contemporary believes, between Calcutta and Cambridge, with a view to bringing the academic system here into direct relations with the English University. But the question is a big one, and Cambridge cannot be expected to decide upon it in a hurry.

MADRAS.

THE Mysore Gold Mining Company crushed 610-4-5 tons of ore during the short month of February, and obtained 989 4-5 ounces of gold.

MR. J. H. NELSON, M.A., District and Sessions Judge of Chingleput, and now on furlough, has just finished a new work on Indian Law, in which the law, as administered by the High Court of Madras, is subjected to severe criticism. The author endeavours to show that he has been in the right path all along—and the court in the wrong.

THE Madras Board of Revenue, it is stated, will be reorganised from the 1st prox. The Board now consists of three members, with a secretary, a sub-secretary, and a sheristadar. These are to be replaced by four commissioners—two for land revenue with two secretaries; a third for separate revenue with one secretary, and the present Personal Assistant to the Salt Commissioner as assistant secretary; and the fourth for agriculture and settlement, with the present sheristadar as secretary.

THE Madras Government has at last issued its orders regarding the allowances to be given to the clerks in the different offices proceeding to Ootacamund this season. If residing in Government quarters the clerks will draw only three-tenths of their pay as Ootacamund allowances, but if residing elsewhere four-tenths. No house-rent at all is to be allowed, and instead of the railway fares being paid to the clerks they will be provided with a railway pass as far as Mettappolliem, with a mileage allowance for the rest of the journey. Residence in the hills has never been popular with the clerks, and will now be less so than ever.

THE strength of the Secretariat establishments, which are to accompany the Government to the Hills this year, has been fixed as follows:—The Chief Secretary's Department and the Revenue Department will each take one 1st Assistant and ten clerks; the Military Department, one 1st Assistant and four clerks; whilst to the Public Works Department has been allotted one 1st Assistant, with four clerks in the General Branch, two in the Railway Branch, and one in the Irrigation Branch.

BOMBAY.

MR. JUSTICE HART and Sir W. W. Hunter proceed to Europe by the mail of the 1st April.

MR. G. H. HAMPTON, Assistant Superintendent, Poona and Nassick Revenue Survey, is allowed furlough for two years.

H.E. THE VICE-ROY has presented the Sir Jamseljee Jejeebhoy School of Art with a silver medal, to be given to any student who may have executed a work, or works, of special excellence during the year.

THE Secunderabad paper states that Mr. Syed Ali Bilgrami has been appointed Inspector of Mines on behalf of his Highness the Nizam's Government, in connection with the Hyderabad (Deccan) Company, which is largely extending its operations.

SURGEON-MAJOR D. E. HUGHES, M.D., Civil Surgeon, Belgaum, has been appointed to act as Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Southern Registration district, in addition to his other duties, during the absence of Surgeon O. H. Channer, who has been granted leave for three months.

THE Bombay season reports show that the reaping of rabi crops is going on in several districts. There is scarcity of fodder and of drinking water in parts of Dharwar. Fever prevails in parts of eight, cattle disease in parts of nine, and small-pox in parts of four districts.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE REV. JAMES LONG.

Our readers, both English and Indian, will hear with regret of the death of the Rev. James Long, for many years Missionary of the Church Missionary Society in Calcutta, and for the last fifteen years, or thereabout, resident in England. Mr. Long has suffered for some years from chronic bronchitis; but he was present at our last soirée, held on the 15th of last month. We learn that he passed away peacefully on the 23rd ult., at his residence in Adam-street, Adelphi. His familiar face and voice will be much missed at the meetings of this Association, of which he was a constant and steady supporter. Mr. Long was a true friend of India and her people, and an earnest student of her literature, her social, family, and village life. He was interested in the language and literature of Russia, and, at different times, spent some months in that country. He looked upon the Russians as a semi-oriental people. He had also, we believe, travelled in most of the countries of Europe. His latest published work, "Eastern Proverbs and Emblems, illustrating Old Truths," one of Trübner's Oriental Series, "begun," as he says in his Preface, "a quarter of a century ago in the jungle of India for the instruction of peasants and women," and giving proverbs translated from at least a score of languages, is a marvel of intelligent research. And this is only one among many works of a similar description. One that lies before us, "The Wit and Wisdom of Bengali Ryots and Women," contains no less than 2358 proverbs.

Mr. Long was a member of the Indian Government Record Commission, and in that capacity published a valuable selection from the Records of Government for the years 1748-1767. He was also a member of the Bengal Social Science Association, and delivered many interesting addresses at its meetings. Indeed, there was scarcely any educational or social movement in Bengal with which he was not actively connected, and his interest in the country continued unabated during his life.

Mr. Long was a constant reader at the British Museum, and we hope the results of his later studies will not be entirely lost.—The Indian Magazine.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

"Give me," said the great Napoleon, "the command of the Channel for four-and-twenty hours, et l'Angleterre aura vécu." This may be taken to be the text of the first article in the present number, that on "England's Unpreparedness for War." Brushing away the fallacious argument "that we have only to keep out of war to be safe" with the wise remark "that is exactly what every weak nation tries to do, with what final success we learn in history," the writer points out, that attack is involved in the very conception of defence; no one "would ever dream of success in any kind of fight if he were not as well prepared to give blows as to parry them." Defence must be "held to include counter-strokes against an enemy's armies in the field, and even against vulnerable points in his own territories. . . . There is no hope of making a successful war on any other terms than being ready to act aggressively as well as defensively."

Yet, to England an efficient attack is at this moment impossible. Let any one to whom this seems incredible peruse the demonstration of the fact (at p. 156). It would not be practicable for us to equip two army corps—other nations count these units by dozens—without denuding our shores of the very last battery required for their defence! And this is the moment chosen by a Government, from whose patriotism one might have hoped better things, to reduce in numerical strength that arm of all others, the field artillery, which, in the event of attempted invasion, would be most presingly necessary, and which, of all others, requires most time to drill into a state of efficiency!

So much for the possibility of attack: we are, by our own laches, precluded from availing ourselves of the great "moral effect of being the assailant, and the intellectual advantage of seizing the initiative."

Not that much time would be given us to make up our minds. It is clearly shown here (pp. 157, 8, 9) that, our means of communication with our own absent fleets, our colonies and the outer world having been destroyed—probably before the actual declaration of war—by the cutting of our submarine cables, "a maritime nation with a fairly strong fleet might count with absolute certainty on throwing a fully organised and equipped army of 100,000 men, to begin with, on these shores." And, as our writer justly observes in answer to the common remark, that the army would never get back, "it would not want to return, till its work had been accomplished, London taken and peace made." In connection with this danger, daily becoming more imminent, and which touches the very existence of our nation, we strongly advise our readers to peruse General Mitchell's excellent article on the same topic in the February number of the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (London: W. H. Allen and Co.), in which, with the aid of maps and plans, the reality of the peril is demonstrated, and the means of averting it elucidated.

Invasion from without is, however, by no means the only danger to be avoided; we have to guard against disruption from within; and it is lamentable to observe that one who has been honoured by the first place in his Sovereign's counsels should be the leader of those whose aim it is to destroy the integrity of Her Empire. From this point of view, an inquiry into "Mr. Gladstone's claims to confidence" is, just now, eminently opportune. Earl Fortescue, writing as a "consistent Liberal," quotes with approval the Radical Miss Martineau's deliverance on the subject, given so far back as 1871, to the effect that, "though he (Mr. G.) had passed some separate measures in an admirable manner, he was showing his expected incapacity for governing the country." Tracing the ex-Premier's career, the noble writer has no difficulty in showing that, alike in domestic, colonial; and in foreign affairs, his proceedings have been inconsistent, and, as a rule, mischievous. Actuated by a morbid and uncanny restlessness—an overweening self-conceit, and an intolerance of contradiction which would be ludicrous were it not pitiable, he has "repeatedly shown that patriotism, in the ordinary acceptance of the word, is a sentiment which he is incapable of understanding." To his will, to his varying whims, his party's, his country's, interests, everything, is to bow. L'Etat c'est moi is the only principle to which, in our judgment, Mr. Gladstone has ever been consistent.

The confusion worse confounded which has rendered imperceptible the ordinary divisions of political parties, and which makes some people inclined to agree with the French soldiery of 1870-1 as to the "hopelessness of any good thing coming out of government by parties," leads Mr. Earl Hodgson to examine the relations between "Party Politics and National Life." We cannot consider his conclusion, that "the national lifeblood, of which those (the two great) parties are merely the channels, has been polluted," as a very encouraging one, though he endeavours to console us by saying "there are signs that the system will cast the poison off." Readers who are interested in noting the deeper springs of political life will peruse this well-considered Essay with profit.

* "The National Review." April, 1887. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

Lord Colchester, in a short, but well-written paper, contributes a vindication of the proceedings, first of the Endowed Schools', and, subsequently, of the Charity, Schools' Commission, as regards educational endowments, a subject on which he, having for some years been an active member of the first-named Commission, speaks with authority. If occasionally, a little more deference might have been shown by the Commissioners to the obvious intentions of that much-ridiculed individual, the "deceased Founder," the storm of obloquy with which their proceedings were assailed was, it will be thought, hardly merited.

Another much disputed question, that of the best means of securing the proper representation of the Laity in the Church, respecting which the pages of the National have set forth the experience of the Churches of Ireland, America, and Australia, (National Review, Vols. VII, VIII.), is considered by Canon Gregory, who, differing entirely from the views advocated by the Archdeacon of Cloyne, Bishop Littlejohn of the American Church, and the Bishop of Sydney, holds that the Great Head of the Church "has committed to its bishops and ministers, in an especial manner, the care of the faith and doctrine to be preserved therein." Few will dispute this; but the worthy Canon seems to have raised a giant to slay him when, speaking of the representation of the Laity, he refers to it (p. 278) as if it were thought "essential to the constitution (of the Church), and to its being regarded as the Body" of its Divine Founder. Much nonsense, both written and spoken, about Lay representation has encountered us, but we have never heard it even hinted that it was "essential" to the validity, or even to the proper working, of a Synod, though it probably would add not a little to the business capacity of the Assembly.

Mr. Crowest advocates, in a sensible paper, the collection and the rendering available to the public of early English music, as one among other means of forming an "English musical style;" and the practised pen of Mr. T. E. Kebbel supplies an interesting account of the Hampshire Family of De Brocas, also the possessors of an estate in Berkshire, of which latter one portion, the celebrated clump of trees, is known to every Etonian. The Rev. H. N. Oxenham, reviewing Dr. Döllinger's published lecture on Mme. de Maintenon, minimises, we think, the terrible evils which she inflicted on France by the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (of which, however, we have no reason to complain, seeing how many hundreds of wealthy, industrious, and law-abiding families it transferred from France to Britain), and, perhaps, exaggerates the lady's beneficial influence. Mr. Theodore Beat's remarkable article on Modern Greek Myths may be commended to every reader, more especially to those who have not quite forgotten their Greek. In the Greek islands (as, according to Ford, in many parts of Spain) the introduction of Christianity has made no impression below the surface; the myths remain, though the sun-god Helios has become the prophet Elias, Hermes (Mercury) the Archangel Michael, and the Virgin assumes the place, sometimes of Proserpine, sometimes of Aurora (Eos), while the Furies (Erinyes) still exist, the fell disease consumption being one of them, and the ferry-money over the river of death is still, under an altered form, paid (p. 231) to Charon.

OUR HOMELY COMEDY AND TRAGEDY.*

"A. K. H. B." is too well known to most of our readers to render it needful for us to tell them that his Essays are chatty, and are especially pleasant reading; and we can say, from personal knowledge, that he is not less successful as a preacher in his beloved pulpit at St. Andrew's than he is as a magazine writer. To St. Andrew's not a few of these papers (among which we seem to recognise an old friend or two from Fraser's Magazine) are devoted, and these, as being the labour of love, will be read with especial pleasure.

Dr. Boyd ventures on dangerous ground when (after remarking, apropos of Bishop Wordsworth, that folks at St. Andrew's did not always like Bishops as they like him) he touches the Disestablishment question, as it "shows" in Scotland. His brief account of a sermon on this question, which he heard in 1885 in his own city, is such as might be expected from a liberal, and emphatically open-minded, clergyman. "Be sure," he says, "that the kirk is as wicked an institution as slavery" before you go against it. The question may at any moment become a "burning" one, and not in Scotland alone; nor could its solution, according to the utmost desires of the agitators, in any way compensate for the bad blood which the raising it must inevitably arouse.

"Tantum religio potuit suadere malorum."

No reader ought to miss the really admirable paper, written in the author's best manner, on "Homely Tragedy." It deals with things of everyday life—common life if you will, for "our exit and our entrance" are common to all; but it is life. There is "a pathos far beyond Aeschylus or Sophocles in the homeliest of Homely Tragedy" (p. 104).

Our author's genial feeling for the cheerful side of life is not less conspicuous than his sympathy with the distressed. No one can help noting his unbounded enjoyment of Nature: scarce a

* "Our Homely Comedy and Tragedy." By the Author of "Recreations of a Country Parson." (Longmans, Green and Co.) 1887.

Paper which does not bear testimony to his keen powers of observation and discrimination of her beauties in all their infinite variety.

We should imagine 'the worthy "Country Parson" to be a genial and eminently "appreciative" companion. The circle of his acquaintance has been wide. He has been intimate with such men as Kingsley, Maurice, Archbishop Tait, Dean Plumptre, Bishop Thorold of Rochester, not to mention a host of minor celebrities; and of every one he has something pleasant to say, and very often a characteristic anecdote to relate. There is not a page in the book which does not well repay perusal.

THROUGH THE LONG DAY.*

The memorials of a literary life should be, and, as a rule, generally are, interesting and eminently readable. And it is natural that this should be the case. A man of eminence in the world of letters comes in contact with so many kindred spirits all journeying the same path that possessing, as needs must be, the power of clothing his experiences in a garb of fascination the jottings of a lifetime possess an attraction far beyond the limited circle of the writer who pens them. Dr. Mackay is no exception to the rule. Take, for instance, his reminiscences. He tells us of times when the Press was all but unknown, being confined to the "mighty Thunderer" and one or two now commonplace newspapers. Cabs and omnibuses were not invented in the days of his youth, and boats on the Thames formed the principal means of locomotion. On one occasion we read that eight corpses of pirates were hanging in chains as a warning to evil-doers, while five men were dangling by the neck in front of Newgate for forgery, shop-lifting, and such-like trifling crimes. So much for the civilisation of the nineteenth century in its early infancy.

London, too, at the commencement of the "eighteen hundreds," was far different from what it now is. There was the quaint old bridge over the Thames in place of the elegant structure which now connects the counties of Surrey and Middlesex. There was no such place as Trafalgar-square, Nelson's monument, the fountains, or the lions. The palatial clubs of Pall-mall were non-existent. The Haymarket was, as its name implies, a market for the sale of hay. There were no lucifer matches, no policemen; their place being held by the old Charlies. But there was Field-lane, infamous with the reminiscences of crime and villainy, Monmouth-street and St. Giles, both rookeries the lowest of the low. Much of this mass of seething corruption has been swept away to make room for modern improvements. But the account of the days of yore is interesting, and many will read with pleasure the fashions and oddities of the good old times when George IV. was king.

Dr. Mackay, too, has travelled considerably in America, Canada, and the Continent, and he has much to tell us about the undercurrent of society in the various cities where he was located. It will astonish many, and disgust more, perhaps, to learn that these American-Irish, who are at the present time stirring up so much mischief in the Old World, and who profess to be democrats pure and simple, holding to the theory that God made the earth, the sea, the sky, not for the benefit of a favoured few, but for the happiness of the toiling many, are themselves so hostile to the negro population of the "States" that they will not associate with them or treat them with the barest civility. They view the "black faces" as inferior beings! So much for the equality of democracy.

It would be easy to fill page after page with Dr. Mackay's chit-chat, as sensible as it is pleasant; but to do so would be to rob the reader of much of the zest of these volumes, for which we have nothing but praise. They are just what they should be, light yet sound, captivating yet instructive, artistic yet appealing to the many-headed public.

THE SIXTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL INDIAN ASSOCIATION.—THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.†

We are glad to observe in both these little brochures evidence of the increasing usefulness of the National Indian Association. Its annual meeting was influentially attended, and was presided over by the Duke of Buckingham, whose speech was thoroughly practical. The assembly was also addressed by Lord Hobhouse, Sir R. Meade, Sir A. Arbuthnot, Mr. Ilbert, and by one or two Native gentlemen. The endeavours of the Association to extend a helping hand to Indian students in London were referred to in terms of well-deserved praise, nor was the important question of female medical aid to Indian women, to which movement we look as a powerful aid in breaking down the existing barriers between the Hindoo and the European, forgotten. No nobler work was ever undertaken than that of which Lady Dufferin has made herself the pioneer.

† The Sixteenth Annual Report of the National Indian Association, Bristol: Arrowsmith, 1887.

The Indian Magazine, April, 1887. London: Kegan Paul and Co. Bristol: Arrowsmith

The April number of the Magazine contains, besides interesting information as regards educational progress, an account of the opening of the Lady Aitchison Hospital at Lahore, where an energetic lady, Dr. Bielby, has long been actively useful. The Hindoo Child Widow is the subject of a sympathetic paper, founded on Dr. Hunter's article in the October number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review, by Miss Shore; while that well-known and indefatigable worker, the late Rev. James Long, so assiduous a visitor of the reading rooms, both of the British Museum and of the India Office, receives an appreciative obituary notice from Mr. J. B. Knight.

THE CENTURY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

The Century Illustrated Magazine for April is worth the trifling sum charged, if only on account of the most excellent article on Canterbury Cathedral. There is also a very good tale of American life called "Little Compton," as well as a valuable Essay on the Veda by Professor Whitney. If to this be added forty or fifty excellent illustrations, what more can possibly be done for 1s. 4d.?

WALFORD'S "ANTIQUARIAN."

Walford's Antiquarian gives, amongst a series of very interesting papers, an attractive article on "Words, Idioms, &c., of the Vulgar." "How to Trace a Pedigree" also merits perusal; while many a toper will find pleasure in reading "The Curiosities of Ale."

The Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) is this month rich in useful and interesting articles for Service readers. Amongst these may be named "The Austrian Navy," "The Future French Army," "The Volunteers of Germany," and last but not least "The Remount Question" as touching our own army, and which is touched upon in a very sensible and practical manner by Lieut.-Colonel J. Graham. Mr. Rathbone Low's paper on "The Relations of the East India Company with Ormuz" is one of historic interest and value. The kindly "In Memoriam" of the late Sir William Andrew, from the pen of Mr. Charles Marvin, will be appreciated by the many friends of the "Lesseps of India." "A Private Soldier's Reminiscences of the Peninsula and Waterloo Campaigns" tell of bygone days of war which will ever have a fascination for Englishmen—no matter how often the story of them is told. "On Leave" is always a welcome, pleasant gossip on social events. This magazine, under its present Editor, is gaining deservedly increased popularity in the Services.

In the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for April, Major General Mitford continues his pleasant pen-and-pencil sketches descriptive of his journey from Lahore to Liverpool via China, Japan, and America. Captain H. R. Gall commences a series of papers on "Modern Tactics," which had been originally delivered for Volunteer officers, and which are now published by special request. Mr. Charles Marvin takes Colonel Malleon to task for having advocated, in case of a war with Russia, an English campaign in the Caucasus, pointing out that such a venture is now altogether out of the question. Mr. Marvin, who has made a study of the subject of Russia's advance towards India, holds that England can now do nothing in checking her northern rival in that advance, except by meeting her and having a life-and-death struggle with her on the Helmund. This was the opinion of the late Sir Charles MacGregor; also Staff Surgeon Dickinson's descriptive account of the Military Station of Beares as it is now and as it was during the Mutiny is a very readable addition to his previous papers on the Military Stations of India. An incisive article from the pen of the Editor regarding "Admiralty and War Office Contracts," cannot fail to attract attention, for it contains some startling statements regarding the rotten condition in which it is said matters relating to the supply of ships of war and war munitions have been for years past at the two great departments named. Major Elliot gives names and figures for the assertions he makes, which are very serious ones; and coming from one who writes with knowledge, derived from actual experience, as he does, it will be a grave scandal if the responsible authorities do not offer some explanation to the public regarding the extraordinary exposé mode.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Leaves from Memory's Log-Book" (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Captain Trafalgar," from the French of Amari Laurie (Cassell and Co.).

INVESTORS ought to be tempted by the alluring prospects held out to them by the St. James's Hall Restaurant Company, which has just acquired the well-known restaurant in Regent-street and Piccadilly. The annual returns of the business for the past four years show a profit which, after allowing for interest on and a sinking fund for the redemption of the debentures now issuing, is sufficient to pay upwards of eleven per cent. per annum on the entire share capital of the company. In these days of cheap money such interest ought to amply satisfy "all dreams of avarice."

THE PUBLIC SERVICE OF INDIA.—II.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN, in the article in the Asiatic Quarterly which we drew attention to last week, has the courage of his convictions, and these will possibly startle some Indian officials of the old and modern school. His solution of the difficulty which is meeting the Government to-day regarding the admission of Natives to a greater extent into the ranks of the Covenanted Civil Service has at least the merit of simplicity if it has also the characteristic of boldness:—

What, then, is the ideal system for recruiting the Public Service of India and for obtaining the best of the Native youth for the important work of administration? I would reply that the Government and Parliament should have the courage to depose from its high place this unlovely fetish of unrestricted and open competition, which in no way satisfies the requirements of India, and is essentially obnoxious to the sentiment of the best and most influential of its people. Let the Government again take into its hands the powers that it is unwisely resigning and establish a Native Civil Service for India, with competition (if competition in some form we must have) between carefully nominated and selected candidates. No Oriental government will endure that voluntarily surrenders what, throughout the East, is one of the normal and necessary attributes of power, the absolute right of appointing, by favour or merit, to high office at the will of the ruler. Revolutionary dreamers may call this favouritism nepotism or jobbery, but the fact remains that Orientals must be ruled by Oriental methods.

He would find suitable employment for Natives of intelligence and respectability in the departments of the Public Works, the Post Office, Telegraphs, Railways, Gaols, Forests, and Police. Many of the appointments in these, now filled by Europeans, might, he thinks, with advantage to the public treasury be made over to Natives, subject, however, to the condition that they did the work at a cheaper rate. He would have the financial condition strictly respected of paying them at the market rate of their intellectual labour. Otherwise he is of opinion that it would be more economical to continue to employ European agency, seeing that in offices requiring originality or mental and bodily energy the European can perform three times the amount of work of a Native. He would not, however, entrust high executive functions to Native hands, for the reason that the administration of India has in the hands of Englishmen grown into a very complex machine, requiring skill, courage, and long experience to work it with safety or to develop its full powers.

The higher branches of the Executive Service must to-day, and for all time, be retained in English hands. The supreme authority in a district and in a division must be an Englishman, and I trust that the sentiment of England will never permit this visible and essential sign of English supremacy to be effaced or obscured by any agitation, however persistent or violent. Unless the administration be conducted on English principles by English officials we have no raison d'être in the country.

But having insisted upon Englishmen thus keeping their hold upon the Executive Administration of India, Sir Lepel comes forward with a proposition that certainly ought to startle the men of Haileybury, the men of competition and all barrister judges who now grace the benches of the High Courts. The proposition in its sudden and sweeping boldness is enough to startle for more than a day or night all the past legal members of Council, and to frighten the present one too. It would have given fits to Mr. Whitley Stokes had it been mooted during his tenure of that office. Here it is:—

Unnecessary, and therefore mischievous, legislation has been the curse of India; while no less harmful has been the action of the law courts, which have corrupted Native India more than anything else since the British advent to power. The gross and universal perjury of the Courts, the like of which is not to be found in Native States, where prima facie the oppression of the ruler should have encouraged falsehood as the natural defence against tyranny, directly springs from the ignorance of British judges who do not know whether a Native witness is telling the truth or a lie. The subtle, and to a Native judge the unmistakable, signs of truth or untruth in the demeanour and voice of the witness, and in the manner and matter of his evidence, are unnoticed by the European, whose mastery of the vernacular is incomplete, and who in many cases knows little or nothing of the social life and customs of the several Indian castes and tribes. This knowledge, which is worth far more than many of the subjects in the competitive examination, is becoming more rare every day. The further the suit is removed from the Native magistrate the more complete is the fiasco; till on the bench of the High Court are found English barristers knowing as little of India as of the moon, and absolutely incompetent to say whether a Native witness is speaking the truth or not. It is consequently in the High Courts, the very most sacred shrine of the temple of justice, that perjury flourishes most rankly. I believe it will be for the advantage of the country if the whole judicial system be transferred, with the exceptions before noticed, to Native hands, and we may reasonably hope that the odium which Courts now excite may be transferred with the judicial emoluments to the Native judiciary.

The exceptions referred to are the reserving of criminal powers to the magistrate of the district, and retaining a certain proportion of English judges on the benches of the High Courts to preserve continuity in the treatment of cases, and a high standard of judicial work. With these reservations Sir Lepel Griffin would make over almost the entire judicial service in India to Native judges.

This proposal will not only startle, but it will no doubt be violently condemned by all who think that the legal changes we have brought to India have been of benefit to the people. We are not of these. Years ago we wrote elsewhere:—"Multiplicity of law is in itself a cause of alarm to our Indian subjects. Our laws are said to do with good men what, according to Machiavelli, Christianity did with them; they make them over to the bad. By making our laws technical we have removed our judges from the people. That the laws of a country should be in advance of its people is a political paradox which, though not unpopular in India, we are not prepared to admit; laws should be confined to the releasing of existing wrongs and the conserving of existing rights, and when they are in advance of the people the country must be a prey to legal theorists."

India has been so since these words were written ten years ago; she is so still, and it is to free her from this intolerable evil that Sir Lepel Griffin makes his sugges-vions to-day. They will not be acted upon, but this does take away from their value.

[COMMUNICATED.]

It being a self-evident fact that the ratio of value between any two articles of commerce—for instance, a bale of cotton and a given quantity of wheat—is perpetually altering, and it also being clearly apparent that each of those commodities is quite as unceasingly fluctuating in price, whether that price is expressed in silver or gold currency, it inevitably follows that the rate of exchange between the two precious metals must be constantly varying through the operation of the same laws of supply and demand which affect the value of the more common necessities of life. This immutable fact renders the doctrine of Bimetallism a phantasmal dream of Utopian nonsense. One would imagine that any school-boy could understand the fundamental principles of barter and their universal application, whether the dealings of the merchant are with vegetable produce, manufactured productions, or costly metals. It is, therefore, matter for wonder that grave, philosophic reasoners should propound the fallacy of one set of laws applying to the exchange of gold and silver and another set of laws applying to the exchange of sugar and wool, or tallow and silver, or tea and gold. But the mind is perfectly astounded to perceive that the Government of such an Empire as India, composed of educated men who are credited with being deeply versed in political science, should be so ignorant of the first principles of cosmopolitan economy as to advocate a compulsory fixed ratio between the two currencies, for the event would be more characteristic of barbarism than enlightened civilisation, and would prove abortive in its attempted permanent enforcement. The mere imagination of such a wild enactment is sufficient to cause a panic in financial circles, for Bimetallism would spell chaos and ruin to thousands upon thousands of British and Indian merchants.

Let us suppose that the English and Indian Governments agreed that ten rupees should equal one pound, and that the forced rate of exchange should come into operation on a given date—the 1st of April would do admirably for the purpose. On the day immediately preceding the innovation the rupee is worth, say, 1s. 6d., the price of a given description of wrought iron being 20s. per cwt. in both England and France, a specified quality of tea being sold in India for one rupee per lb. and in China for its equivalent, and a given quantity and quality of cotton selling in the United States for the sum of 20s. These prices would be practically current when the new law came into force. On that day an English shipper might receive an order from India for ten tons of iron selling at 20s. per cwt., for which he would be bound to accept two thousand rupees. He is also desirous of buying from the United States two hundred pounds worth of cotton, but he requires the money that he takes for the iron to pay for the cotton, and discovers that the American merchant only values two thousand rupees at £150—their intrinsic worth. Now, as the English shipper would lose £50 by this double transaction it is obvious that he would refuse business. The Indian merchant could then apply to France, and the French shippers, being able to make an untrammelled bargain, would charge on the quotation of the day 2,666½ rupees for the iron. In this way England would lose an immense volume of trade. Again, the English shipper might require a thousand pounds worth of tea, the price being one rupee per lb. in India and its equivalent in China, but the English money would only purchase 10,000 lbs. of tea in India, whereas the same coin would buy in China 13,333½ lbs. In this way India also would lose an immense volume of trade.

Now, it is quite evident that the confusion which Bimetallism would produce in the commercial world could not continue, for the artificial values would soon be nullified, and the ridiculous law evaded. The English shipper would contrive, in some way or other, to get his 13½ rupees for the pound sterling, and the Indian merchants would reduce their prices so as to balance against the fictitious appreciation of silver. The effect would therefore be a violent temporary wrench in commercial affairs, entailing dreadful loss to both England and India, and the permanent diversion of a large volume of trade into other channels before the normal equilibrium could be restored.

It is true that in England we have a restricted system of Bimetallism, or, rather, trimetallism, but its application is so limited in extent, and so beneficial in its results, that it will bear no comparison with the proposed gigantic innovation. The English shilling is not a twentieth of a pound, neither is the penny the twelfth of a shilling, but as copper is only legal tender up to a very small amount, and silver only an enforced currency up to the sum of 40s., and as the advantages of small change are so limitless, the fictitious value given by Government to coined silver and copper is accepted by the nation without question. But when it comes to be seriously discussed as to whether the silver rupee shall represent a tenth of a pound in England, and the twelfth, thirteenth, or fourteenth of a pound in France, it is quite time that the financier should realise the danger of such a preposterous scheme, and veto the irrational proposal by a clear expression of common sense, and the advocating of uninterrupted commercial freedom based upon the sound data of economic science.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the valuable Concessions obtained in November, 1884, and May, 1886, from the Sultan of Johore, by W. McGregor Smith and Dalton Sayle, in the name of Mr. William Keswick, of Hong Kong, and of No. 3, Lombard Street, in the City of London, Merchant, as their Trustees.

These Concessions comprise (with the special privileges hereinafter more particularly described) the right to select 100,000 acres of land (an area of upwards of 156 square miles) in the territory of Johore and Moar, in the Malay Peninsula, which is distant only about 90 miles from Singapore. The concessions are held direct from the Government of Johore, which has recently entered into an offensive and defensive treaty with the British Government.

Of these 100,000 acres, upwards of 80,000, believed to be the choicest and most valuable land in the territory, have already been selected, the survey being now in progress as regards the remainder. A skilled planter accompanies the surveyor, with instructions to reject any land not of the richest character.

The tenure is for a term of 999 years, and the property is not burdened with any fixed payment, the rent being 2½ per cent. of the gross products on the spot. Opium is a Government monopoly, but its cultivation by the Company is not contemplated. With the exception of Opium, Pepper, Gambier, and one or two other items of an unimportant character, Export or other Duties cannot, under the terms of the concessions, be imposed upon any of the products cultivated upon the property. As such duties, which will probably vary with the requirements and expenses of the Government, are chargeable to other Planters in the territory, it is at once apparent that the value of the concessions is enormously enhanced.

The climate of the southern portion of the Malay peninsula, situated within three degrees of the Equator, and practically surrounded by the sea, is both humid and equable, the mean variation of the temperature of Singapore and Johore being from 70° to 90° (Fahrenheit). The rainfall averages 100 inches, which renders land in this territory peculiarly adapted for the growth of tropical products, one special advantage being that they are capable of cultivation all the year round without intermission. There are no regular wet or dry seasons, as in most other tropical countries, but the rainfall continues at short intervals throughout the year. For example, it may be mentioned that two distinct crops of Tobacco, the same as the well known Sumatra Tobacco grown by the various Deli Companies, can be produced in one year. Johore is only divided from Sumatra by the Straits of Malacca.

The lands acquired by the Company are of virgin soil, and contain forests of primeval timber, including Teak, Ironwood, India Rubber, and various other tropical and valuable woods. Many and various specimens of this timber were shown at the Forestry Exhibition in Edinburgh, in 1884, and a large number were awarded prizes.

The lands are remarkable for the numerous Fibrous Plants, such as "Rhea," "Moorva," &c., which are indigenous to the soil; "Rhea" and "Moorva" are used as substitutes for Cotton, Flax and Wool, the former being also employed for mixing with Silk. These fibres will, on account of their low cost, gradually but surely revolutionise the manufacture of many descriptions of staple goods, and a reference to the annexed report of Mr. W. E. Deane shows the profits which the growth and preparation of these fibres are calculated to produce.

The long standing difficulty in connection with the separation of the fibre from Rhea stems which has for so many years occupied the attention of the Government of India has recently been overcome, and Machines have been invented which are able to reduce these fibres to a marketable condition.

The lands are also specially suitable for the growth of Tobacco, Pepper, and other products, and it is proposed to expend the Capital of the Company now asked for in the cultivation of about 17,000 acres in the following proportions:—

	Tobacco.	Pepper.	Fibres.
	10,000 Acres.	2,000 Acres.	5,000 Acres.
*Estimated Working Capital.	£275,000	£54,000	£145,000
Estimated Annual Profit.	£200,000	£90,000	£205,000
	3rd Year	4th "	5th and subsequent years, £140,000

Estimated Ultimate Annual profit on expenditure of £500,000 £605,000.

* It must be borne in mind that a considerable portion of Capital expenditure is returned with each crop, and is available with the reserve fund for the planting of further land.

Such an Estimate of Profit as the foregoing may, at first glance, be sceptically regarded, but in evidence of the immense profits which are being derived through the employment of capital in undertakings precisely similar in character to that of this Company, the following particulars of dividends paid by the Deli Companies of Sumatra may be quoted:—

	The Deli Maatschappij.	The Tabak Maatschappij.	The Amsterdam Deli Company.
	65 per cent.	25 per cent.	10 per cent.
In 1882 ...	101	50	30
1883 ...	77	60	30
1884 ...	107	100	60

The Returns for 1886 are not yet available.

The Singapore and Straits Directory, which contains a record of Estates and Lands held in the Straits Settlements, Sumatra, &c., shows that the lands leased by the three above-named Deli Companies, collectively embrace under 77,000 acres (of which it is understood that only a small portion is at present under actual cultivation). The total paid-up Capital of these three Companies amounts to upwards of £400,000. Not only have the Deli Companies paid these dividends, but they have in addition set aside 15 per cent. of their profits towards a sinking fund for redemption of capital. The Deli Companies' Leases have moreover only been granted for a period of 75 years as against 999 years, the term for which the Johore Company's Estates are held. The present price of the Deli Maatschappij 100 guilders shares is 680.

A considerable portion of the Estate will, when cleared for cultivation, be let to tenants, who are readily obtainable from the Malay and Chinese population, the rental for which it is estimated will average £4 10s. per acre per annum.

The work of clearing and cultivating the land must necessarily occupy some time, but with special regard to tobacco, a crop can be raised and realised during the current year, and assuming that at least 5,000 acres—a moderate estimate—can be brought under cultivation within the first 15 months, and that in each following year a further 5,000 acres can be made productive, at least £100,000 net profit should be realised during the year 1888, and in subsequent years this profit should be proportionately increased. The following condensed summary shows the profits which, under such circumstances, would accrue to the holders of the Ordinary Shares, a sum of £10,000 being allowed in the calculation for each year for Establishment expenses.

6 per cent. Interest on Debenture Bonds, £250,000, will absorb	£15,000
10 " Dividend on Ordinary Shares, £600,000	60,000
10 " for Reserve Fund to be set aside...	£75,000
	10,000
Total ...	£85,000
Minimum Estimated Net Profit during 1889, say, £200,000.
6 per cent. Interest on Debenture Stock, and 10 per cent. Dividend on Ordinary Shares will absorb	£75,000
10 per cent. for Reserve Fund	20,000
Total ...	£95,000
Leaving a Balance of ...	105,000
Three-fifths of £105,000 = £63,000, will provide a further Div. on Ordinary Shares of 10½ per cent. In all 20½ per cent.

It is considered needless to pursue these calculations further in detail, but an annual rate of increase in profits, if only half such amount, would enable the Company in the fifth year, namely, 1892 (when it is presumed that the 17,000 acres will have been brought up to profitable cultivation), to divide among the Shareholders nearly 55 per cent., besides having appropriated to the Reserve Fund nearly £150,000.

The importance of securing skilful and competent management on the Estates is an element of the first consideration, and in order to make due provision for the same, the services of three Resident Managers (one of whom, Mr. Tom Gibson, is now on the Estates) have been secured. The other two Managers, who have been especially selected on account of their practical experience in planting, &c., will immediately proceed to Johore, both being prepared to at once enter upon their respective duties.

A plentiful supply of cheap labour is available; Chinese coolies (the best labourers in the world for tropical climates) are readily obtainable in Johore and Singapore at seven dollars, equal to 2½s. 4d. per month, while in neighbouring countries their wages are not less than ten dollars, equal to 88s. 4d. per month, a difference of £6 per coolie per annum, in favour of the Company.

One of the great advantages in connection with these concessions is the water frontage which the land possesses. A reference to Map No. 1 will show that the River Moar forms a water highway for many miles through the property; the Moar is at all periods of the year navigable by vessels drawing 10 feet of water, while those of the heaviest draft can anchor off the mouth of the river, which is in the direct route of the China Mail Steamers. The water facilities thus afforded reduce the cost of transport to a minimum.

The following Contracts have been entered into, namely, a Contract dated the 2nd day of April, 1887, made between the said Wm. McGregor Smith and others of the 1st part, and the Johore Company, Limited, of the 2nd part; whereby the Company acquires the property referred to in the said Concessions at the price of £250,000, payable in Shares of the Company and in cash as therein provided. There are also Contracts relating to tenancy of the offices and other unimportant matters which, as they do not in any way affect the terms of purchase, the Directors have been advised need not be set out in this prospectus. Applicants for Shares will be deemed to waive all further reference to or specification of Contracts, and names and dates other than as above. All the Contracts, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association, the Original Concessions, and the Debenture Mortgage and Trust Deed and Form of Debenture, may be inspected at the Offices of the Company.

Application will in due course be made to the Committee of the London Stock Exchange for a special settlement and official quotation of the Company's Shares.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares and Debentures may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, and Solicitors, or at the Offices of the Company.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette
 has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service
 Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
 freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
 circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
 It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Government, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 25th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 23rd March; and from Calcutta to the 22nd March.

THE Viceroy arrived at Siswa in Nepal on the 18th March, and subsequently proceeded on a shooting expedition.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY has arrived at Calcutta and taken over charge of the Government. Mr. Peacock, Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government, has postponed going on furlough till July, so that the new Lieutenant-Governor will have the benefit of his experience for some months to come.

THE Select Committee of the Imperial Legislative Council on the Punjab Land Bills have finished their revision of these measures, which will now be sent back to the Punjab Government for consideration.

A VERY successful banquet was given in honour of Sir Rivers Thompson in the Calcutta Town Hall on March 17th. Sir Rivers subsequently received addresses testifying to the impartiality with which he had governed Bengal, and the strides that Province had made during his incumbency of the Lieutenant-Governorship. A fund, which already amounts to Rs. 25,000, is being raised for a memorial to perpetuate Sir Rivers Thompson's connection with Bengal.

MR. D. M. SMEATON, Director of Agriculture in the North-West Provinces, has been offered by Mr. Crosthwaite the appointment of Secretary to Government in Burma.

GENERAL GOODFELLOW is mentioned as the probable successor of the late General Hancock in the Public Works Secretaryship to the Government of India.

THE Governor of Madras has made Mr. C. A. Lawson, the senior representative of the local Press, a Fellow of the University.

THE two rail heads, from Sibi and Quetta, of the Sind-Peshin State Railway, met and joined at midnight on the 14th March. Thus the greatest railway undertaking of latter days in India has become an accomplished fact.

SOME differences that have arisen between the Government of India in the Railway Department and the contractor for a section of the Bellary-Kistna State Railway, and which have caused considerable delay in the progress of the work, are likely to form the subject of legal proceedings.

It is said that should the matter be brought before the Courts some interesting information will be revealed as to the mode of arranging Government contracts, and the numerous difficulties under which contractors sometimes labour.

RUKHMABHAI has lodged an appeal in the High Court against the decree of Mr. Justice Farran for the restitution of conjugal rights.

THE Court of Inquiry which was ordered to investigate the alleged frauds in connection with the late rifle shooting meeting at Bangalore has exonerated the whole of the members who took part in the shooting. This decision has evidently not been accepted, as the Court has been ordered to reassemble.

THE Government of India, having before them the special report of Dr. Ribbentrop, head of the Forest Department, have decided to allow the Bombay-Burma Trading Company to continue their leases of such forests as they were working in Upper Burma during Thebaw's time. The company will have to accept such special legislation as the Government may deem it necessary to pass for the good government of the districts in which the forests lie; but no difficulty is likely to arise on this score. Instead of paying lump sums down annually the lessees will probably accept the suggestion of the Government to pay on their outturn from the forests, at rates hereafter to be settled.

REGARDING the Tibetan outpost, which has so long established itself in Sikkim, the Lhasa authorities have declared their willingness to recall their troops (a miserable handful) if orders to that effect are received from China. These will doubtless be forthcoming shortly.

THE Sir Richard Garth testimonial fund at Calcutta amounts to Rs. 10,000. At a meeting of the subscribers it was decided to commission an eminent English artist to paint a portrait of Sir Richard, a sub-committee was appointed to confer with him as to its disposal, and it was decided to hand over any remaining balance to the Lady Dufferin Fund.

It is understood that the vigilance of the Finance Committee has extended to the Remount Agency at Calcutta, and that the officer who succeeds Major St. Quinton will find the salary materially reduced.

THE sowar of the 2nd Central India Horse, who lately shot Major Neill on parade, is said to have done so in a spirit of revenge, as the Major had reprimanded him shortly before for untidiness.

MR. H. J. NEWBURY, whose name has been so much before the public recently in connection with the Rangpore Deer Case, is gazetted to retire from the 1st April. Mr. Newbury intends to appeal to the Governor-General against the sentence passed upon him by the Bengal Government.

MR. G. H. WILSON, whose conduct was the subject of the inquiries of the Ahmedabad Commission, goes home immediately to lay his case before the Secretary of State.

COLONEL J. P. STEELE, Superintending Engineer in Rajputana, officiates probably as Chief Engineer of the Punjab for Colonel Aeneas Perkins, who is just going on six months' leave.

COLONEL FILGATE, R.E., Accountant-General, Public Works Department, takes six months' leave in July next.

MR. H. BARNES, Political Agent in Peshin, has been granted a year's furlough. Mr. Martindale will probably officiate.

ON the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal's departure his Private Secretary, Mr. F. Barnes, has been appointed to officiate as Superintendent of Stamps and Stationery in place of Mr. Ryland, who is retiring.

THE Bengal Chamber of Commerce have forwarded a letter to the Public Service Commission deprecating any change in the present basis of the Government of India.

THE German community of Bombay celebrated the anniversary of the ninetieth birthday of the Emperor William by dining together on the evening of the 22nd March.

A BRANCH of the Geographical Society of Lisbon has been established at Goa.

THE rice crop in Siam this year is reported to have been the most abundant known in that country during the present generation.

A RELIGIOUS controversy at Surat has brought to light from the archives of the holy see of Dwarka a document in the shape of a copper-plate of the fifth century.

THE situation in Nepal has suddenly taken a fresh development. On the afternoon of the 13th of March General Khudga Shamsheer, Commander-in-Chief of Nepal, and his uncle, Colonel Kesar Singh Thappa, as also the Kancha Maya, a daughter of the late Sir Jung Bahadur, were suddenly arrested at Khatmandu by order of the Minister, Maharaja Bir Shamsheer. Various reasons are given for the arrest, amongst which is one that the above-named persons were implicated in a plot against the Minister's life. Khudga Shamsheer has been a very influential member of the Shamsheer administration ever since it rose to power by the assassination of Sir Rungbeer Singh in the end of 1885. The above-named persons were immediately after their arrest deported from Khatmandu in various directions.

News from Kabul up to the 10th March showed that all was quiet there, no movement having occurred among the Ghilzais up to that date. As a precautionary measure the Khelat-i-Ghilzai garrison has been reinforced by troops from Kandahar. The Amir remains at Cabul to meet the headmen whom he summoned to assemble on the Nauroz in the capital.

Notes of the Week.

ACCORDING to the Times telegram there is an absence of exciting political topics in India just now, and consequently the case of the unfortunate Hindu lady, Rukhmabai, is attracting considerable public attention. She has appealed against the order of the Court which condemned her to six months' imprisonment if she continued to refuse to live with her husband, and as this appeal cannot be heard till June she has the advantage of a delay which her friends are making the most of to agitate her cause. A committee has been formed, and funds are being raised in order to fight the case to the last before the Court of Appeal.

ALL Englishmen and Englishwomen must, of course, sympathise with the unhappy lady who declines to ratify her marriage with the clown to whom she was betrothed in tender years; but it is one thing to sympathise, and another thing to alter a law which the English Government has promised the Hindus shall guide its judges. It is all very well, saying as the Times correspondent says, that the force of English and Anglo-Indian opinion should compel the Government to alter the law. To do so would strike at the very root of the Hindu system of child-marriage—a custom very shocking, no doubt, to English ideas, but one which finds favour and is still fostered in nearly every Hindu home. Attempt to put it down by the strong hand of the law, and there will be a Native revolt throughout India.

ENGLAND cannot afford that, in order to carry out a sentiment. The wished-for reform must come from the people themselves, and they at present show no signs of moving in the desired direction. A Parsi gentleman has been agitating the question, but the castes and customs of Hinduism are not likely to be changed or reformed through such means. English interference would not only be mischievous, but dangerous. India may be a country of anomalies, but we must accept them, as they are, trusting to time and education for their abolition.

THE argument that we put down Suttee is not an analogous one. We had the people, except a few of the most bigoted, with us then. We have not this now in the question of early marriages. One of the most enlightened of Hindu writers, who had all the advantages of an English training and experience in England of English life, has written defending the custom of his country in this respect. "In Europe," he says, "the husband and wife study each others' tempers, inclinations, and turns of mind before they are married: this gives the parties a freedom of choice. But, alas, for such freedom! They marry, and marriage dissipates the false brilliancy that had dazzled their discretion. For lovers to choose is therefore a fallacious privilege; and to it is to be attributed the extensive unhappiness resulting from European marriages. In India the parents choose and not the children; and, being free from the heat and folly of youth, they generally choose well."

ONE may smile at the above sentiments or condemn them, but when they are held by a Hindu of refinement, culture, and travel, what argument is likely to have weight with the millions of the uneducated who hold the system of child-marriage in veneration? Rukhmabai's case may help towards bringing about a change in the minds of Hindu ladies who dare think for themselves as she has done; but this will be a matter of time, and, we fear, a long time.

THE Hindu Patriot, the most advanced of the Native papers, and a representative of all the better classes of Hindus, expresses what must be accepted as the general feeling of the Native community on this matter:—

Rukhmabai, the Bombay young lady—who, inspired with fine notions of independence and freedom which Western education has instilled into her, rebelled against the authority of her husband—has been taken as a martyr by her sympathisers. She has lost her case, and the Anglo-Indian Press of Bombay is very angry with the High Court Judges who dared to enforce the Hindu law of marriage. Dadaji, the unfortunate young husband, "who, in addition to other drawbacks, is said to have the intelligence of a coolie," may be utterly unworthy to become the consort of such a fine lady as Rukhmabai, but he is nevertheless her husband, and the laws of all civilised countries would repudiate any action which would in the slightest degree interfere with conjugal relations. We wonder how the judgment of the Bombay Press could be so warped as to support the perverse proceedings of an ill-advised wife against her lawful husband.

RUKHMABAI has, however, a very practical sympathiser in the person of one of her own sex and caste. "A Daughter of India," who, dissatisfied also with her husband, writes to a Bombay paper: "I fully sympathise with her, and admire her willingness to be a martyr. If she will let me be her substitute I will gladly go into imprisonment for a limited period." The qualifying of the martyrdom by accepting only a limited period of incarceration is a touch of feminine caution worthy of any wife of Western culture. There are some English wives who would no doubt enjoy a limited period of imprisonment to be free of their husbands. But Rukhmabai had better come to England. This seems the only escape for her now.

THE Jubilee jail-delivery in India was not altogether to the liking of many of the discharged prisoners, who look very properly upon an Indian jail as a comfortable and pleasant retirement during their leisure from burglarious pursuits. The forced liberation of the criminal classes has caused much envy amongst another class—the class of unsuccessful students for University honours. Being in bondage of the examiners, one of the plucked ones has addressed the following letter to the Vice-Chancellor of the Bombay University:—

Even in such a small village as Muddebihal the celebration of the Jubilee was very attractive. According to the Government order all the British subjects spent those days very happily. Loyal prisoners from every district are released. There is another class of loyal prisoners yet unseen. The class consists of the unsuccessful candidates who want some marks in a paper. These are the loyal prisoners of the University. The Government of India showed its kindness towards its loyal prisoners. But nowhere the University of Bombay did not show kindness towards its loyal prisoners. Are we not the loyal subjects of the Queen? Why should we not be released from such an indefinite imprisonment? Why should we not share the humanity and kindness of her rule? I hope that your honour will be kind enough to consider our case and liberate some of the deserving unsuccessful candidates.

THE Trade and Navigation reports of British India for February shows the following results as compared with the same month in the two preceding years:—Imports, excluding treasure, Rs. 5,13,84,118, against Rs. 4,53,62,924 and Rs. 4,13,41,419; exports, Rs. 8,49,10,265, against Rs. 7,87,21,793 and Rs. 7,63,92,780; import duty collected, Rs. 22,37,167, against Rs. 18,13,310 and Rs. 17,68,943; export duty, Rs. 13,60,748, against Rs. 11,33,342 and Rs.

9,32,451. The results for the eleven months ending with February are:—Imports, Rs. 56,02,85,852, against Rs. 50,40,47,165 and Rs. 50,85,23,464; exports, Rs. 79,16,37,720, against Rs. 74,33,09,300 and Rs. 74,45,79,594; import duty, Rs. 2,25,88,901, against Rs. 2,03,77,068 and Rs. 2,12,87,711; export duty, Rs. 54,71,323, against Rs. 56,93,707 and Rs. 44,72,695.

THE latest news from Burma is to the effect that General Arbuthnot will leave Rangoon for England on the 5th of May, by which date the withdrawal of the troops from Upper Burma will have been completed, and the arrangements for the disposition of the remaining force will have been concluded. The command of the force in Upper Burma, which will not then exceed that of a major-general, will devolve on General White.

WE have received a private letter giving full and exact details of the circumstances under which Major A. H. S. McNeill, of the Central India Horse, met his death at the hands of a trooper, which account tallies completely with that which appears in the Bombay papers received by the present mail, and which will be found in another column. The writer of the letter in question concludes thus:—"A great gloom has been cast over all the regiment at the loss of such a dear commander, for he was beloved by everyone."

THE Indian brewers have cause to be glad. They have obtained a ten years' contract from the Government for the supply of beer to the troops on a sliding scale varying with the rise or fall of the rupee. Should that unhappy coin rise to 1s. 9d. or upwards, the brewers are to receive only Rs. 47 per hogshead, but should it fall to 1s. 3d. or to nil, the price to be paid will be Rs. 57. Under the new arrangements it is calculated that Government will effect an annual saving of £125,000 by encouraging this local industry instead of contracting for the supply from England.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 10.

In the absence of more exciting political topics Rukhmabai's case continues to attract much attention. That unfortunate lady, as I mentioned last week, has appealed against Mr. Justice Farran's order, and as the appeal cannot be heard till June she at least gains the advantage of delay. Meanwhile a committee has been formed at Bombay under the presidency of Professor Wordsworth to take action with a view to the removal of the anomaly which applies coercive English provisions to enforce a Hindoo religious obligation not enforced by the Hindoo law. The committee is busily engaged in raising funds, and seems determined to thresh out the case again before the Appeal Court. Should that tribunal uphold the ruling of the Court of first instance, it is to be hoped that the funds will suffice to carry the case to and to obtain an authoritative decision from the Privy Council. The sympathy shown by the British Press and public is fully appreciated here, but it would appear that the exact position of affairs is not clearly understood at home. If the existing order is not set aside, Rukhmabai will be liable not to trial by a criminal Court, but to six months' imprisonment in a civil gaol for disobedience to the order of a civil Court. That imprisonment over her troubles will not be necessarily at an end, for if her husband again requests her to live with him, and she again refuses, a fresh cause of action will arise, and the whole miserable business may be repeated over and over again after the expiration of each term of imprisonment. It is therefore in the highest degree desirable that the Court of ultimate appeal should have an opportunity of expressing its opinion on the legal point. Should that opinion be adverse to Rukhmabai, the force of English and Anglo-Indian opinion will certainly compel the Government to alter the law.

It is remarkable how little interest the Native community shows in this matter. Some few earnest men in Bombay have thrown themselves heartily into the cause; but the Native journals and the Young Indian school of agitators who write them, while clamouring daily for political reforms and concessions, rarely utter a word of sympathy with their unfortunate countrywoman, who is so likely to prove a martyr for want of a more important and pressing social reform. The March number of the Voice of India, a magazine which professes to summarise the utterances of the Native Press on the principal topics of the day, contains not a single allusion to Rukhmabai's case.

Last week witnessed an instance of the change which railways and telegraphs are making even in Indian official ceremonies. Hitherto the making over of the charge of a province by one Lieutenant-Governor to another was a somewhat solemn affair. Perhaps an even more solemn ceremony was the installation of a new member of the Viceregal Council, which used to take place in the Council Chamber at Calcutta, under a salute from the guns of Fort William. All this has now been altered. Sir C. Aitchison left Lahore on the evening of the 1st instant, when his successor, Mr. Lyall, had only got as far as Allahabad on his northward journey. Accordingly the charge of the Punjab was made over and received by an interchange of telegrams. Sir C. Aitchison next day passed Saharunpore on his way to Bombay. He was going home on leave, and it was necessary under the rules that he should first take his seat as a Member of Council and be granted a furlough in that capacity. The Viceroy was also passing through Saharunpore. A special meeting of Council was held on the railway platform, the warrant of appointment was read, and Sir C. Aitchison was duly admitted and granted leave, after which he resumed his journey, while the Viceroy went on to Dehra-Doon, where he now is, and where it is announced he means to stay for a fortnight longer before going to Simla.

Efforts are being made in Scinde to induce the Government to construct a railway 240 miles long, from Pali on the Rajputana line to Hyderabad, via Umarkote. It is urged that the line will present no engineering difficulties, and that by shortening the journey from Delhi to Kurrachee by fifteen hours, it will prove of great mercantile and strategic importance, as well as a valuable protection against famine. A meeting in favour of making the line has been held, and memorials to the Government were prepared.

Last week Calcutta was visited by a party of Japanese commercial men, charged by the merchants of Hiogo to inquire into the working of the Indian Chambers of Commerce, and the possibility of increasing the trade of India and Japan. They propose to proceed to Bombay and prosecute their inquiries there.

The Maharajah Holkar will leave Bombay for Marseilles on the 29th inst., and after a short stay in Paris will proceed to England, arriving in time for the Jubilee. Sir Lepel Griffin will accompany him.

If we may credit the Pioneer, the administrative machine in Cashmere has come to a standstill owing to a disagreement the Maharaja has had with the Dewan, Luchman Dass. "A fortnight or ten days ago, on some papers being brought to him as usual to sign, his Highness is said to have given a flat refusal, declaring in effect that he was being treated as a child and would be so no more. He then apparently addressed the Resident by letter, demanding a new council and a change generally in the present system of government; while by other accounts it would appear that the position he has taken up, on communicating with the Resident is that he will refer his complaints only to the Viceroy. There is a stop consequently to business, and the position of parties therefore seems to be that the Resident and Dewan are ranged on one side versus the Maharajah and the State officials generally on the other. It is significant that the Princes, Rajas Ram Singh and Umar Sing, who lately formed a party in opposition to their elder brother, seem to have come round to him again; and it may be presumed that most of the leading men of the State will also seize the opportunity of making common cause against the Dewan."

THE Bombay Gazette says:—There is one aspect of the Hindu Conjugal Rights case the examination of which cannot be—and we believe will not be—confined to this country. It is clear that the Bombay High Court is in this matter deriving from the practices of the English Courts examples for the enforcement of Hindu law. Now if Hindu law, so far as it bore upon the point in question, were not repugnant to the principles of English law—to say nothing of our general ideas of personal liberty—there would be nothing in this but an anomaly of which the English people, tolerant as they are of anomalies, would think there was no reason to complain. But here the repugnance is glaring: The Courts are proposing to apply, to a young woman who had no voice in her marriage, and has never lived with her husband, disciplinary measures which in England have been employed only in the case of a wife wedded with her free and full consent to the husband of her choice. We should like, while public opinion on this subject is declaring itself in India—as it does to day in the indignant protest which "Only a Woman" indites in another column—to see brought before public opinion in England the question whether the contemptuous disregard for the rights and will of the woman which is shown by the apologists for the recent judgment is to be made effective by processes borrowed from the Courts in England, but applied there—in the rare cases in which they have been applied—only where the wife has broken a contract into which she had entered as freely as the husband. We are inclined to think that opinion at home will revolt against this, as the more enlightened opinion in India is revolting against it the more clearly the inconsistency and the inequity which are involved are thought of.

THE DISTRICT OFFICIAL IN CAMP.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The camp life of a District official is a pleasant time to him. But with the first week in March the pleasure fades with the increasing heat. The country begins to put on its hot-weather aspect of barren dustiness. The autumn crops have been gathered, and are represented by stacks of jowari stalks, scattered over the hazy plain. The cotton fields are given up to herds of cattle and goats, which nibble the feeble sprouts of the moribund plants. The jowari grain has been trampled out by muzzled oxen, and on the long-distant threshing floor against the sky-line are prominent the figures of human winnowing machines. Perched on high extemporized platforms they pour out the contents of their baskets with upraised arms, the heavy grain falling straight to earth, while the light chaff is carried aside by the warm breeze. A few weeks ago the linseed fields, with their bright expanse of blue flowers and refreshing green, were a sight to gladden the eye; the plant has now been rooted up and stacked at threshing floors. But one pleasant sight still remains in the fields; the wheat harvest is in full swing. Overspreading fields of maize-coloured heavy-eared grain are dotted by scattered groups of dark-skinned men, and of brightly clothed women and children. The figures are bent in many attitudes of work, and in the bright sunlight show in striking relief against the light-coloured grain. A few days will see the last of the harvest, and nothing will interpose between the ground and the baking rays of the March sun. The country is putting on its hot-weather look—dry, dusty, barren, parched. The air is becoming unrefreshing, and does not fill the lungs. The horizon is seen through a dust and heat haze, which lengthens distances in a dreary, dreamy way. Only the call of duty or the tyranny of sport will now prolong camp life. When those who can are thinking of closing their wanderings, the time is opportune for viewing some of the features of official camp life from more points than one.

Let us take the first as experienced by the official himself. What pleasanter life can be imagined? The day begins by light refreshment under a fine mango or tamarind tree. Then comes the march to the next camping ground, not too long for comfort. To one who is anything of a naturalist, and even to him who, with no special knowledge has yet the faculty of observation, the march can scarcely fail to be of interest. Beasts and birds, plants and insects, give constant food for observation, and if the official has not smothered the hunting instinct we all inherit from our far-away savage ancestors by effeminating codes and back-rounding law quibbles, each march will afford him a pleasure he will look back to with longing when, in after years, he finds himself in the old country confined to roads and frequented tracks. For here the whole country is his to roam over, and its stock of game, large and small, from tiger to quail, is his for the shooting. Arrived at his day's resting-place, he finds his comforts cared for; bath and breakfast invigorate him for the toils of office work during the day. Some small game-shooting near camp, a stroll with his wife, or an official visit to the village, fill up the evening until dark. Such a life is healthy and pleasant; fortunate are those to whom it comes in the course of duty. What would not the desk-tied Bombay merchant give for two months of it yearly? But let us now take a different point of view, that of some of the residents of the village honoured by the official's visit. To some of them the visit is not entirely a thing of pleasure. To begin with the arrival of the camp. In some districts this is what happens:—A band of villagers is impressed to do the heavy part, the unloading camels and pitching tents; remuneration is not thought of. The village potter is called on to supply water-vessels for the camp without payment. Loads of wood are demanded, for each chuprassi and bunch of servants must have his log fire at night. If wood is scarce, each house in the village has to supply cakes of ordinary country fuel. Jowari stacks are laid under contribution for the official's animal. The village bunniah, placed under a tree, far enough from the office tent to prevent the victim's remonstrances reaching its occupants, sells supplies at the "Sirkari nerik," or Government rate, a rate fixed by the peons, and sometimes considerably ranging below market rates. The herdsman's best sheep is taken at a lower price than it would realize if its luckless owner could sell it at the next bazaar day. Evening comes, and again a band of villagers is impressed to strike tents and to load camels; their labours extend far into the night, and when these are ended some half-a-dozen are taken to the next village, to show the way, to carry breakable articles or the official's long arm-chair, or to pilot the butler's cart with a lantern. Inside his tent, the official sleeps the sleep of "mild self-approbation," and possibly in his dreams makes no break of continuity of his waking convictions that he is an indispensable earthly providence to the people of his district. Outside, however, groups of cold and sleepy villagers sit, protecting his cattle from thievish men or ravaging beasts, and wishing that their earthly providence would exercise his functions at a distance. In the early morning the official is escorted from the village by the headman and the local magnate, who, in taking his leave, outwardly thank him for the honour of his visit, but inwardly pray that it may be long before it is repeated. The idea that the visits of a District official to the various parts of his charge is an unmixed blessing to the people is an illusion which does not stand the test of universal experience. An official tour impresses on the country population the fact that there is still a "Sirkar," and that its meanest servant, still as in old time, wields a large power.

THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

The Pioneer says:—A rumour is abroad, the wish evidently fathering the thought, that the Court, finding that the public sense is against the Imperial Institute as a monument of the Jubilee, will withdraw the subscription list from circulation. At any rate, the Prince of Wales and those ranged with him in the project cannot fail to have noticed how coldly the idea of the magnificent institute has been received in India. In one or two isolated instances, Native princes have put down their names for a large sum, but the general attitude is certainly one of reluctance to "part" until the importunity of Collector or Political Agent has made the necessity clear. Royalty, however, is persevering; and unless the robust public opinion of England declares more decidedly than seems at all likely against the scheme, India will unquestionably soon be favoured with an appeal to give liberally to the Imperial Institute, as a thing entirely apart from our own Jubilee celebration. Now, how will this be met? The position, we take it, is that there will be an institute founded of some kind, and it remains for those who represent India's interests to make the best of it. They must see that Indian money is not unavoidably wasted, and that as much good as is obtainable is extracted from the project. The experience of the Indo-Colonial Exhibition has shown that to give Indian money to be expended under dictation from England ends in Indian interests being sacrificed. How, indeed, could it be otherwise? The only way to secure due benefit from the Indian section of the Institute, when it is created, is to insist upon Indian money being spent under arrangements in which the commercial and financial authorities here shall have a chief voice. The money should not be sent to England unconditionally; nor should India accept a position inferior to any colony. As a matter of fact, there is not a colony in Australia which can take rank as yet with one of the greater Indian provinces, and yet the whole agglomeration of such provinces has been put in a lower position than any of the colonies however small! This is an anomaly which certainly cannot be perpetuated; if any attempt be made to do so at home, the Indian subscription list to the institute should be instantly closed. Our Chambers of Commerce ought, if any funds at all are subscribed here for commercial objects, to insist on their having some active part in the arrangements, and every large province ought to assert its claim to maintain some control over a system which must involve continuous correspondence with provincial officers in all parts of India. In the present stage of the Institute project, the two points to which prominence should be given are:—That India should be at least on the same footing as the colonies; and that the money should not be sent home except under such conditions as will guarantee that Indian interests will be adequately considered. It will be time enough to discuss how this should be at a later stage; our Chambers of Commerce and the provincial authorities will be quite equal to arranging the details when we have secured the two points mentioned. In conclusion, we would suggest that economy should be the watchword in this matter; when the Institute passes from its nebular state to that of a distinctly defined organisation India may support it; but it is fair to suppose that we shall be pleasing the Queen-Empress far more by doing so in a way which will secure some solid good to the country at a reasonable expense than by lavishing large sums on empty show and glitter.

The Civil and Military Gazette says:—Few great undertakings have ever succeeded without preliminary prophecies of failure. The Imperial Institute will doubtless prove no exception to the ordinary rule. According to some authorities, it has so far met with little support and with much opposition; and the Calcutta Englishman goes so far as to say that Her Majesty the Queen would prefer to see the scheme withdrawn. That there has been opposition, in certain quarters, is beyond question. Dr. Forbes Watson, for one, has warmly condemned the committee's report and has given forth a counterblast, in which he curiously speaks of "the more than hesitancy" with which the report has been received in England. Dr. Forbes Watson, it may be noted, is anxious to see an institute of his own design founded; and his objections to anyone else's institute are not altogether disinterested. It may be hoped, however, that when the details of the committee's report become generally known, they will be discussed on their merits and receive sufficient support from the public to warrant definite action. In India especially, the Queen's approval will go far to recommend the cause; and although a good deal has been said in the way of criticism, before this approval was made public, it cannot be alleged that any better plan for celebrating the Royal Jubilee was ever put forward.

Native Opinion says:—We cannot believe Her Majesty the Queen-Empress pins her faith in the prosperity of her empire upon an absolute monopoly of industrial trade by the British people; industrial light is just as much wanted in India as in some of the British backward colonies, and it is here that the British public should come forward with their hoards of money at their elbows to advance the cause of mechanical labour instead of attempting to draw off capital in the shape of money to England, where if people were minded to have an institute of their own, they could do so without outside help. As we have said on several occasions the ideas of Indian people in respect of the Jubilee or other important events entirely differ from those prevalent in the West; as the Times of India has so well put it, it is the sovereign and not the people who ought to spend from his purse to mark the events. It will be admitted by all that the Indian public has celebrated the Jubilee quite beyond their means, and therefore neither the Indian Government nor the Prince of Wales's committee in England ought to use either persuasion or pressure for the collection of funds—a circumstance which cannot but considerably mar the feelings of joy and gratification just now so uppermost in the minds of men. If the British committee be at all anxious on this score let them contribute their mite, as a former Collector of Sattara has done, towards the new Victoria Technical Institute to mark the Jubilee of Her Majesty.

The Lahore Tribune says:—Indian princes who have subscribed handsome amounts to the Institute, without knowing of what use the Institute will be to India, have done so under the pressure brought to bear upon them by the "certain parties" in England and the Government of India. While the nobility and gentry have not yet subscribed for the permanent memorial of the Jubilee to be established in India, the Imperial Institute has already had its share. Even in England the institute has met with but little favour, and although royalty is exerting its best, the project has not reached the stage when the promoters can confidently look upon its success.

BOMBAY SEPOYS IN BURMA.

(Times of India.)

A thousand Bombay sepoy enlisted some time back in the Burma Police. Two thousand more are now wanted, but they are not coming forward with any alacrity. The reluctance of sepoy serving with Native regiments now in Burma, to volunteer for the military police now being organised for that country, has caused some surprise among the military authorities. Good pay is offered, the life would be one of more freedom and independence than is possible while under regimental discipline, and conspicuous energy and courage would be sure to be rewarded. This is all very true; but there is another side to the question. In the first place, the sepoy is so well off in his own service that he thinks twice before leaving it. Secondly, he does not like Burma, for among other things, he cannot mix or have anything to do with a people who have no caste. And thirdly, the life of the military police, the isolated posts they have to hold, the jungle life they are obliged to lead, and peculiar nature of their duties, do not commend the situation to the ordinary sepoy. It is not any want of military spirit, we are convinced, that prevents his coming forward to volunteer. It is mainly that he prefers to be a soldier to being a military policeman. By-and-by the men may show more alacrity in coming forward, but it is not to be expected that the sepoy will become cosmopolitan all at once. When we remember how comparatively recent it is that sepoy could be brought to cross the dreaded Kalapani, it must be owned that the cheerfulness with which one Native regiment vies with another in volunteering for service in whatever part of the world the Sirkar may desire to send them, is of itself a wonderful and gratifying change from the old exclusive spirit. Malta, Burma, Egypt, it is all one to the sepoy where he goes, or how long the journey. He is going on field service with his regiment, and that is quite enough for him. But when he is asked to remain permanently in a foreign country, it is not to be wondered at if he does not care very much about the prospect. And we think the same objection will hold good in regard to the scheme of military colonisation to be tried in Upper Burma, where it is said deserving Native officers and pensioned sepoy are to be offered jagirs on condition of maintaining local order. Whether the scheme will be as popular as a contemporary hopes it may be, is, as we said before, open to doubt. There is any amount of land lying waste in Upper Burma as there is in Australia, but whether the pensioned Native officer, who has done thirty-two years' service, who has saved a little money, and who above all things looks forward to retirement as synonymous with dignified ease and comfort is exactly the man to make a thriving colonist, remains to be seen. If the jagir in Upper Burma is to be coupled with the condition of maintaining local peace, then it becomes a still more doubtful blessing, because it seems to imply that not only will the pensioned Subedar have to stockade his house according to the custom of the country, but he will also have to take enough friends with him into retirement, to enable him to hold his own against his neighbours, to say nothing of maintaining the peace of the neighbourhood. Add to this that he will go among a people of whose language he is ignorant, and with whose habits, modes of thought and methods he has no sympathy, and it will be seen that the idea of colonising and pacifying Upper Burma by means of the retired Subedar is hardly practical. Even Parsees who go everywhere, and thrive everywhere, have not yet taken kindly to Burma. The only foreigner who really loves the country, who marries its daughters, and carries off much of its superfluous cash, is John Chinaman. It is he, and not the retired Subedar, who is the man to settle as a Colonist in Burma.

SOCIAL CHANGES IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

(Times of India.)

Jubilee Year seems likely to produce an enormous crop of literature, dealing more or less directly with the events that have marked the reign of Her Majesty the Queen. We do not suppose that there is much likelihood of anyone in India writing a book about the social changes that have taken place among Anglo-Indians during the last fifty years, and yet the subject might be made a very interesting one. Take the army, for instance. Compare an old Indian Army List of 1837 with one for 1887, and it appears almost impossible that the two books can belong to the same service. In those days Field Officers were a select band of warriors, respected, we had almost said venerated, on account of their age, their position, and their extreme rarity. Fifty years ago the field officer was on an eminence from which he looked down upon a goodly array of captains, lieutenants, and ensigns, all of whom were at his beck and call. In 1887 all this is completely altered. Field officers have increased and multiplied to an unparalleled extent. They have become, indeed, as plentiful as blackberries, and they share the common fate of things that are too common. Captains appear to be becoming more and more rare, while lieutenants have only quite recently sown signs of coming forward in any numbers, and the ensign, as everyone knows, is as extinct as the Dodo. The sarcasm that our Native regiments are officered by old gentlemen and boys has enough truth in it to enable it to pass muster, but it is robbed of its sting by the fact that somehow or other our Sepoy has never been more efficient, or better disciplined, than they are to-day. The costume of the Indian Army has altered as much as the way in which it is officered. The stiff leather stock, the buttoned-up tunic, the black cloth trousers, and the curiously hideous shako have all disappeared, and we have the Indian soldier of to-day as he is familiar to all of us in serviceable, soldierlike Khakee, brown leather accoutrement, and light comfortable helmet, going off to the wars with an eighty-pound tent, and seventy pounds of baggage, making his whole worldly belongings for field service come within the modest weight of a hundred and fifty pounds. The same Spartan simplicity is now observed by all ranks when on field service, the General Officer curtailing himself almost as much as the Subaltern. As a contrast to this, we cannot do better than quote the following graphic and amusing description of the baggage of a General Officer who took part in the first Indian war after Her Majesty had ascended the throne, namely, the famous and ill-fated expedition to Cabul in 1839. It is from an almost forgotten book, published in 1842, by one who went through the campaign. "Brigadier-General Arnold, having been long suffering under a liver complaint," says the author, "breathed his last at Cabul, shortly after our arrival there. This officer, who belonged to the Army of the Indus, was distinguished for his qualities as a bon vivant, and having laid in a good store of necessaries for the campaign, was almost the only one who fared well amidst the general privations." He was carried from Kandahar to Cabul in a palanquin, and took no part whatever in the events which took place between those places. His remains were interred in the Armenian burial-ground, outside the walls of the city, and his effects were publicly sold by auction a few days after.

The General, it seems, had left Bengal with about eighty camels laden with baggage and necessaries, of which about five-and-twenty remained at his death. His trunks were filled with quantities of plate, a goodly provision of snuff and cigars, and such an immense stock of linen that it occupied two days of the sale. His cooking apparatus was most elaborate and ingenious, and it is difficult to imagine the uses to which the infinite varieties of small and curious articles of which it was composed could be devoted. The prices at which these effects were sold will appear almost incredible, but it must be remembered that it was the scarcity, in fact the almost total impossibility of getting supplies, that enhanced their value. The cigars sold at the rate of about two shillings and sixpence each; the snuff at ten shillings an ounce; a few bottles of beer, a liquor of which no other officer in the Army possessed a drop, at thirty shillings each; and some choice wines at from three to four pounds the bottle. The other things brought proportionate prices, the shirts fetching from thirty to forty shillings each. The amount realised at this sale must have been enormous. This curious and interesting account of a General Officer of the olden time going on the war path with eighty camel loads of refreshments for the inner man, and raiment for his outward adornment, shows the change between then and now. In one respect, indeed, history has lately curiously repeated itself as regards one or two of the prices paid above. An officer who was present at the siege of Kandahar in 1860 has informed us that at the sale of the effects of a distinguished and gallant officer the solitary bottle of beer of which he died possessed was knocked down, after a very keen competition, to a "Tommy Atkins," for fifteen rupees, the fortunate purchaser at once knocking off the neck of the bottle and imbibing the contents. A bottle of brandy at this same sale fetched thirty-three rupees, we believe. But here the parallel ends, for in the 1880 campaign no one officer was much better off than another, the General and the Subaltern alike roughing it.

In another respect, too, a wonderful change has come over military society since Her Majesty ascended the throne. General officers no longer call out junior officers who have insulted them, however grievous the affront may be, yet shortly before the Queen's accession we find the following extraordinary duel taking place at Mussoorie between a full General and a full Ensign:—It appears that one evening in June, General Sir Stamford Wittingham, K.C.B., K.C.H., G.C.F., Colonel of the 71st Highland Light Infantry, and a very distinguished officer, was taking his evening ride at Mussoorie in company with some ladies, when at a narrow and dangerous part of the road, a European without hat, jacket, or cravat, came riding along at a furious pace. Most of the persons who saw him considered him drunk. He nearly charged into the riding party, and frightened some of the ladies very much. The General was riding with four or five of the party at the time, when the European in question rode up against him, and nearly knocked his pony over the precipice. Sir Stamford, feeling indignant at this outrage, and conceiving the offender to be some low European, in a hasty moment struck him with his whip. The person rode on without taking any notice, and the General sent an officer after him to see who he was. He turned out to be an Ensign of a Bengal Infantry Regiment, then on leave at Mussoorie. It appears that the Ensign, on finding who had struck him, sent round a circular next day abusing the "person on horseback" who had attacked him, and justified the strong language of his circular by pretending that he could not find out the name of his assailant. On hearing about this the General at once sent an Aide-de-Camp to call out the redoubtable Ensign, and a meeting was arranged for the next morning. The two accordingly met in the early morning, and the Ensign blazed away at his opponent without effect. Sir Stamford, who was one of the best pistol shots in the British Army, calmly fired in the air, and the duel was at an end. But what follows is perhaps the most singular part of the whole affair. The stout old General told the bellicose Ensign that having now met him as a gentleman, he had no hesitation in telling him that when he had ridden up against him he could not have supposed him to have been an officer. The General added that under the impression that the Ensign was a drunken loafer he had struck him, all the circumstances of the case being exceedingly irritating. Sir Stamford ended his harangue by saying that private satisfaction having been given they now resumed their relative positions, and that therefore he ordered Ensign ——— to go to his room and consider himself under arrest! All's well that ends well, and it is satisfactory to know that this eccentric Ensign expressed himself as much impressed with the generous conduct of the General, to whom he also expressed his sincere sorrow for what had occurred. He was then released from arrest, and we lose sight of him, but can only hope that he gave up riding furiously about Mussoorie without "hat, jacket, or cravat." The whole episode brings out in a very striking manner the social gulf that divides us of the present day from our predecessors in India fifty years ago.

RUSSIA AND INDIA.

(Pioneer.)

Such of our readers as are interested in the Central Asian Question may have noticed how frequently of late our London correspondent on Trans-Frontier Affairs has referred to coming troubles in the Khanates on the Upper Oxus, consequent on Russian aims in that quarter, and the persistency with which he has advocated the occupation of Gilgit, and the "protection" of the Baroghil Pass in the Hindu Kush. His line of argument is that Russia will seize Shighnan and Roshan, and eventually raise a revolt against Abdur Rahman in Badakshan. To quote his own words:—"A revolt in Badakshan can easily be brought to pass, and it must be the immediate precursor of a Russian descent on the Baroghil Pass. In anticipation of a Russian seizure of Herat, many steps have been taken; in anticipation of this move, not one! Do not let the Government of India delay in occupying Baroghil through the Chiefs of Yassin and Chitral, and in stationing a force at Gilgit. The exposed angle of the Indian fortress has been neglected far too long." Similarly, we find in the Asiatic Quarterly Review attention called to the danger in the Kashmir direction. We are there told that the Government of India are not so blind as the general public, who ignore the Russian army in Turkistan, and it is added:—"This awakening (on the part of the Indian Government) is entirely due to the fact that the routes and passes converging from the Pamir on Kashmir have been discovered to be much more feasible for an army than was credited only a short time ago. Quite recently a Russian officer, M. Gombtchevsky, succeeded in reaching Hunza, only a day's march from Gilgit, and his report was to the effect that an army would have the choice of three good passes between Tash Kurgan and Kashmir. One consequence of his visit was that Hunza, over which the Chinese had for six years asserted their right to receive tribute, has become dependent on the Government of India, and both Colonels Lockhart and Barrow visited it on their way to Badakshan. It is now evident that steps will have to be promptly taken for the fortification of the Kashmir frontier, and that it will be as necessary to provide 'an entrenched camp of final stand' at Gilgit or some other suitable site, as at Sayid Hamid (in Peshin). The real solution would be to occupy the Baroghil Pass, and to raise a contingent of Chitralis and Kafirs. But Abdur Rahman is hyper-sensitive as to our acts in this quarter, although his own authority is limited by the Kunar Valley; and we must work in this quarter entirely on our own responsibility. Now, we have all along advocated the strengthening of our north-west frontier, but here is a scheme at which we may well stand aghast, involving as it does the actual occupation of a pass on the Hindu Kush, and the placing of a garrison in the wild hill-country north of Kashmir, "at Gilgit or some other suitable site," hundreds of miles from the nearest Indian cantonment. If things have indeed come to this critical stage, we should be justified in occupying Kashmir itself to-morrow and placing an army of at least 20,000 men there. But, fortunately for our peace of mind, the whole argument is based on absolutely wrong premises, and there need consequently be no cause for alarm. To deal first with the Russian officer with the impossible name; he may indeed have reached Hunza, (which by the way, is 50 miles from Gilgit, through a most difficult country), but that he found three passes over the Hindu Kush practicable for an army is mere moonshine. Had he made such a discovery we should never have heard of it, for the Russians keep intelligence of this kind profoundly secret; the very fact of his announcing his success is proof positive to our mind that he found the Hindu Kush anything but practicable for an army. As to Hunza having become dependent on the Government of India as "one consequence of his visit," that also is a fiction. Colonel Lockhart certainly passed through Hunza, but he was received in a hostile manner, and it was only by tact and audacity that he got safely onwards, the position being at one time so critical that he warned his small escort of 20 sepoys to be ready for action. Captain (not Colonel) Barrow was one of his party at the time, though the article we have quoted would seem to suggest that he was on a separate expedition. Turning now to the general argument about the Baroghil Pass we may repeat what has been said before in India, that the result of Colonel Lockhart's exploration was to show that the Hindu Kush south of the Pamir is not practicable for an army. His little party was nearly lost in the snow, when crossing the Range at the most feasible point, and this in the middle of summer! The country on either slope too, is so barren and so sparsely populated, that no supplies could be obtained, and but for food being provided by the Afghan outpost at Kila Panjab, the explorers would probably have starved. Colonel Lockhart returned by way of the Dorah Pass which leads directly from Badakshan, and this also is impracticable for an army. Various other passages were examined, and all with the same result. The old fiction about the Baroghil being so easy that a carriage could be driven over it has been exploded; and we have really in the Hindu Kush from the Pamir south-westwards to Badakshan as safe a natural defence as we could wish. There is no occasion to hold the Baroghil, or to form an entrenched camp at Gilgit; but, as we have before pointed out, we should do well to have a Resident at the latter place, so as to render permanent our present good relations with Chitral. Small parties of Russians could undoubtedly cross the Hindu Kush into the Chitral Valley or even into Kafirstan, and they might stir up intrigues against the Amir of Kabul and Kashmir in that quarter, but they would direct their steps southwards down the Kunar Valley and not involve themselves in the rocky and barren country about Gilgit. Our best preparation for such a move would be the making of a good military road from Fort Abazai to Dir, distant as the crow flies less than 100 miles from Peshawur; we should then be able to co-operate with the Chitralis on their flank, and make their position equally untenable. But the probability of the Russians ever advancing from the Badakshan direction is so remote, considering that the passes are only open for three months in the year, and that snow falls even during that period, that we need not be apprehensive of danger from this quarter. With Kabul as their first objective from Balkh they are not likely to fritter away their strength by operations from the Upper Oxus Valley.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Judging from the idea put forward in a proposal appearing under the auspices of a body which claims to be the Punjab Science Institute, a technical school is to be one where more chemistry and physics are to be substituted for less dead languages and higher mathematics. Courses of, say, Bee-keeping or Land-surveying are to take places of Sanscrit and early English text; and in the future the principles of agricultural science and mechanical drawing shall form part of a liberal education. Specially qualified professors will examine up to a first, second, or third class standard, and special degrees will be conferred on all qualified students. Is not such a proposal going up somewhat too high? It is as yet not much good talking about teaching freehand and mechanical drawing, and the "Principles" with a big P of the Science of Agriculture in all the schools of the Province, any more than it is necessary to establish departmental depôts for flasks and retorts, or central workshops for supplying scientific apparatus—among which seem to be included anatomical specimens, models of fruit, and collections of implements—for educational purposes.

BENGAL.

THE news from the indigo districts in Bengal is, on the whole, favourable, but rain is now required to freshen up the October sowings and to enable the planters to go on with their spring sowings. In Behar the spring sowings are nearly completed, and have generally been got in under favourable circumstances. Some rain has fallen in Muzafarpur and Chapra, but not sufficient to do any damage, though the threatening aspect of the weather had caused several planters to stop work. Should the weather continue fine for another fortnight the spring sowings may be considered safe.

THE Englishman has taken the trouble to examine the Civil List for some years back, with the result that it finds that instead of Mohamedans being more largely employed now than formerly, they are less so. In 1873, out of 205 Deputy Magistrates 32 were Mohamedans; in 1887, out of 271 there were only 28. In the former year, among 233 Sub Judges and Munsifs there were 39 Mohamedans, while in the latter the number dwindled down to 9 out of 299. As regards the Registration Department, it finds that out of 240 Rural Sub-Registrars only 96 were Mohamedans.

THE unveiling of the memorial portrait of the late Keshub Chunder Sen, the great Hindoo reformer, was one of the last public acts to be performed by Sir Rivers Thompson in the capacity of Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. His Honour spoke in the highest terms of the Hindu reformer, instancing him as a bright product of our educational system—a system which, though it had opponents in its inception and had probably opponents at the present day, had given us men who had attained high educational qualifications, and had gained all the advantages of the culture and refinement of English literature. Turning to the social reforms which Keshub Chunder advocated, he said he had no doubt that, as civilisation extended and education expanded, the minds of the people, these reforms in the Hindu families and in customs of their domestic life would press for clear solution.

A DEPUTATION of twenty members of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce presented a farewell address to the Lieut.-Governor. The address referred to the high reputation Sir Rivers Thompson had won in the various offices he had filled, and went on to say:—"We may, perhaps, be permitted to place on record the conviction we hold that your habitual moderation has been one of the most powerful of influences which have led the communities whom you found heated and excited when you took office back to a peace which will, we trust, develop into a cordial union on all points where union means the advancement and security of the common weal. In this union we, as merchants, have a deep and abiding interest." The address added that the Lieut.-Governor had been a great supporter of railway enterprise, and had always been ready to listen to the views and give effect to the representations of the Chamber; and that, although hampered by the financial necessities of the Supreme Government, his Honour had the satisfaction of knowing he left Bengal in a better condition to deal with an expanding trade than that in which he found it.

A CALCUTTA contemporary hears that Mr. Guildford Molesworth and Colonel Pemberton have been deputed by Government to inquire into the causes of the alarming excess over the estimates of the actual expenditure on the Peshin Frontier Railway. The following are a few facts relating to the Sind-Peshin line, which is 157 miles long from Sibi to Quetta, 90 miles being ordinary line and 67 miles difficult—some portions very difficult. The probable cost of the line was originally estimated at 200 lakhs. At the beginning of 1886, when ample experience of the cost of working had been obtained, and when two-thirds of the work had actually been done, a regular estimate was submitted amounting to a little over 300 lakhs. Later still, in 1886, another estimate was found to be required. This amounted to over 400 lakhs. And now we learn that the final expenditure will be nearly 500 lakhs. These facts, our contemporary remarks, plainly call for a full investigation by competent and impartial experts.

MADRAS.

CAPTAIN MULLINS, A.D.C., met with a rather serious accident when riding on the Island (Madras), as he was thrown from his horse and dislocated his collar-bone.

THE Commissioner of Police at Madras has sent, for the information of the Bangalore Police, a list of property—including currency notes, jewellery, gold and silver plates, &c.—stolen from Colonel Gajraj, of the Nepal Army, at Tuticorin, amounting to the value of Rs. 1,80,093.

THE latest craze of the officers of the Salvation Army is to paint their foreheads in imitation of the caste marks of Hindoos. A Madras paper noticing the arrival of Major Tucker and other Salvationists at that city says that Major Tucker "wears on his forehead a red dot surrounded by three crescents, each of a different hue—red, yellow, and blue."

IF the return submitted to Government by the Inspector-General of Police, Madras, of the cattle destroyed by tigers and cheetahs during the quarter ending 31st December, 1886, can be considered reliable, Mr. Stripes and his cousins have had a merry time of it in Malabar and South Canara at the expense of the poor ryot. According to the return, no fewer than 209 bullocks, 301 cows, 53 calves, 67 buffaloes, 3 sheep, and 20 goats were destroyed by tigers and cheetahs in Malabar; and 363 bullocks, 372 cows, 74 calves, 55 buffaloes, 19 goats, 45 dogs, and 12 pigs were similarly lost in South Canara.

THE appointment of the Rev. Father Sewell, of St. Joseph's College, Trichinopoly, to the honour of the Fellowship of the University of Madras, says a local paper, will be hailed by his many old and young friends as a graceful recognition by the Government of the good work of a genuinely good man. Father Sewell entered the Madras Army, and had attained the rank of major when religious convictions decided him to resign the service, and seek admission to the ministry of the Roman Catholic Church, which he had recently joined. He was under instruction for three years at Negapatam, and then was admitted to the Society of Jesus, and was ordained. "He is—if we may presume to say so of a priest—just as cheery and kind-hearted a gentleman now that he is a robed and tonsured, as he was when he was a prominent officer in the Commissariat Department. He is doing unobtrusively excellent work as an educationist in Trichinopoly, and he is a distinct gain to the august body of Fellows."

BOMBAY.

MR. W. H. F. BOLTON has been appointed to act as Collector and Magistrate of Kurrahee during the absence of Lieut.-Colonel Crawford.

MR. C. P. COOPER, the Chief Presidency Magistrate, intends to proceed to Europe on furlough for twelve months in May.

MR. G. N. R. LAMBERT, M.Inst.C.E., has been appointed to act as Superintending Engineer for Irrigation in Sind, vice Colonel J. LeMesurier, R.E., who vacates under the regulations, on promotion to Major-General.

THE Bombay Guardian referring to the Cambay case says:—"We find it difficult to believe that the Political Agent at Cambay has been guilty of such turpitude as the Government think has been brought home to him. If really guilty, we know not that capital punishment would be too severe."

THE Bombay season reports show that reaping operations are in progress in twelve and have been completed in three districts. Scarcity of fodder and drinking water continues in parts of Dharwar. Fever, cattle-disease, and small-pox prevail in parts of ten, eleven and five districts, respectively, and cholera in parts of one district.

FROM the date of the retirement of Mr. A. A. C. Jervoise, Mr. G. F. M. Grant becomes Collector and Magistrate of Belgaum, continuing to act as Collector of Sattara; Mr. A. Keyser becomes Senior Collector; Mr. J. F. Muir becomes Junior Collector and Collector and Magistrate of Tanna; and Mr. E. McCallum, First Assistant Collector, and Mr. J. Davidson, Second Assistant Collector.

LORD AND LADY BRASSEY have shown their practical interest in the local centre of the St. John's Ambulance Association in many ways. In addition to becoming life members by subscribing five guineas each they have guaranteed a further sum of ten guineas to cover the expense of translating H. R. H. Prince Christian's excellent translation of Professor Esmarch's lectures on ambulance in the Nide Memoire into Gujarati and Mahratti for the use of Natives.

THE Pioneer writing of the Cambay case says that "the decision came upon us, as it must have come upon almost every one who followed with close attention the course of the trial, with a shock of complete surprise. Both the Commissioners are men of high standing and very well spoken of in the Bombay Presidency; and their demeanour in Court, their patience and courtesy, and their careful manner of recording the evidence, appear to have made a very favourable impression. It is true that their passive reception of much matter of questionable relevance might have suggested misgivings as to whether they would ultimately be found equal to the task of sifting the wheat from the chaff; and it is also true that they seldom, if ever, dropped a remark, as practised judges would do, which might indicate the points to which efforts of counsel should be directed. Again, some of the questions put by them to Mr. Wilson at the close of the inquiry appeared to indicate that their minds were travelling rather outside the limits of the Commission, and that they were in some danger of mixing up the question whether Mr. Wilson was guilty on the charge they had to try, with the very different question whether he was altogether a good political agent. Still, on the whole, there seemed no serious reason to doubt that the Commissioners knew what they were about, and the outcome of their deliberations comes upon us the more unexpectedly."

MR. JUSTICE JARDINE has given an important judgment as regards the right of a Mahomedan to claim possession of his wife. One Hajee Mahomed Abadilla was married in Bombay about six months ago to a Mahomedan girl named Beebee, who, he said was of about eighteen years of age. The latter lived with her husband for about four months, and she was afterwards induced by her father and one Pakkee Malabari to leave his protection, which she did, taking away with her a few ornaments and articles of the value of about Rs. 93 belonging to her husband. Hajee Mahomed accordingly filed a suit against his father-in-law and Pakkee Malabari for the wrongful detention of his wife, and prayed that she should be called upon to return to his house. In a written agreement produced in Court on behalf of Beebee it was stated that the plaintiff was to keep his wife with her parents and hand over all his income to her for her protection and maintenance. Beebee in her written statement, made through her guardian ad litem, admitted the marriage ceremony, but stated that she was a minor and that the marriage had never been consummated. She stated that she was unwilling to live with the plaintiff as his wife, and submitted that under the Mahomedan law applicable to her case, she had, on attaining majority by puberty, the right of repudiating the marriage contract. But if the Court was of opinion that she had no such right, then she might be allowed to remain in the charge and custody of her parents until she attained her majority by puberty or according to law. His lordship disregarded entirely the plaintiff's claim about the ornaments and other property, as he did not believe it to be true. But, as regards his claim to the possession of his wife, his lordship was of opinion that, having regard to the fact that the plaintiff had occasionally beaten her, probably because his wife had refused him his marital rights, the Court would not be justified merely on the ground of such violence to refuse him his marital rights. If the girl had attained her majority her mere disinclination would not by itself be a sufficient justification of her refusal to give the plaintiff his conjugal rights. But it would be otherwise if she had not attained puberty. The evidence on the matter of fact was contradictory, but his lordship saw no reason to discredit the evidence that the girl was only eleven years of age. Following the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Moonshie Buzloor's case, his lordship dismissed the suit with costs.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE clergyman at Umballa has reported eight military officers for playing a polo match on a Sunday.

MENR ALI, the leading member of the Mahomedan community at Hoshiarpur, who was charged with abetting murder and dacoity during the late Hoshiarpur riots, and was sentenced by the Sessions judge, Mr. Hawkins, under several sections, to death, with confiscation of all his property, has appealed to the Chief Court, and the case was to come up for re-trial recently.

It is stated that serious defalcations have been discovered in the Provident Fund of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway employees, the sum so far found to be unaccounted for amounting to some fifteen hundred rupees. A Bengali Babu, engaged in the department, who is believed to be the author of the frauds, has absconded.

THE SHOOTING OF MAJOR NEILL.

It has been asserted that the shooting of Major Neill on parade at Agar, the other day, was an act of revenge on the part of a sowar who had been found to be at fault. The following account shows that the murder was probably motiveless, and due to homicidal mania. Two other officers, it will be seen, had a narrow escape from sharing the fate of Major Neill:—

On the morning of Monday, the 14th March, the 2nd Central India Horse paraded in four squadrons for field firing, which was to take the form of an attack on a small position. Half the sowars dismounted and began the attack at 600 yards. Major Neill, Lieut. Cotgrave, and Lieut. Watson were the only British officers on parade. When the advance had reached to within about 300 yards from the targets, a man just in front of Major Neill turned round and fired at him. The major threw up his arms and fell from his saddle. Lieut. Cotgrave and Lieut. Watson jumped off their horses and rushed to his assistance, and as they were doing so the same man fired a shot at Lieut. Cotgrave, and loaded again to have a shot at Lieut. Watson, but was seized and overpowered. The two officers found poor Major Neill quite insensible, with a bullet wound in his right side, and he died in about a quarter of an hour without having uttered a word. He could not have suffered a moment's pain, for he gave no sign of life or feeling, and never even groaned. The murderer was in hospital in January for "aphasia," or loss of speech. He could not then speak to any one, and for three days refused food, but recovered, and was discharged from hospital on the 14th of February, to all appearance perfectly well. He has since been doing his duty and attending parade in the ordinary manner, but it came out at the inquest, on the evidence of some of his comrades, that he has not been himself, but has been behaving in a peculiar way since he rejoined the troop. There is hardly room for doubt that the cerebral affection for which he was treated in hospital, and of which, as was shown by his subsequent behaviour, he was never entirely cured, had developed into actual insanity at the time of the murder.

TANTIA BHEEL THE DACOIT.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—On April 15, 1884, p. 388, I recalled your attention to the necessity of speedily constructing a railway from Jubulpoor to Nagpur.

My arguments are now confirmed by the breaking of the Great Indian Peninsula Railroad by dacoits between Bombay and Jubulpoor. Tantia Bheel, who has preserved his liberty to plunder during so many years, is supposed to have caused some rails to be removed; but although a slow passenger train was stopped, no life has yet been lost.

Tantia is tender about taking life, but the fear of him may check the progress of trains during dark nights, even supposing that the two mountain torrents, the Bookri and the Ajunta, do not interrupt communications next July.

Government must construct an alternative line between Bhosul Junction Station on the Tapti and Jubulpoor; the Grand Trunk Dekhan Road between Jubulpoor and Nagpur has been carefully surveyed, and estimates for a railway made; but, until the rail has been laid down, India cannot be considered safe.

The authorities are reticent, but the editor of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail, in his paper of the 16th of last month, p. 309, has given timely warning of our danger.—Your obedient servant,
April 5. T.

NAVAL REFORM.*

Upon the efficiency and supremacy of the Navy depends the very existence of England as a nation. Not only would this Empire lose weight in the councils of the world were she not prepared to strike as well as speak, but dependent as she is on her commerce for the daily food for her inhabitants, were she unable to protect her mercantile marine, starvation would in a few weeks be the fate of every dweller in the land. Immeasurably important, therefore, must of necessity be all questions affecting our ships, their armament, and their crew. The appearance of a translation of M. Gabriel Charmes' work on "Naval Reform" may well serve to draw attention to the interesting, albeit difficult, topics upon which it touches, and a glance at its pages should be alike attractive and replete with instruction.

It is the practice of some alarmists in this country, who, not understanding the matters about which they preach, to decry what is beyond their capacity, and such persons labour under the idea that England is rotten to the core. These pessimists see in imagination our ships sinking at the hands of any foe which has pluck enough to attack them. They tell us everything is wrong, and, like Cassandra of old, they deem it their mission to croak and cry alas! alas! Far be it from us to advocate the policy of the ostrich, which, in times of danger, buries its beak in the sand, and fancies apparently that its whole body is invisible. If our Navy be inadequate to the demands of the country, by all means we urge let it be increased coute qui coute! If we build the wrong class of ships, then let us turn over a new leaf and start afresh in the right direction. But be this as it may, there are not a few, ourselves amongst the number, who hold to the opinion that the difficulties under which we labour in England are shared by our rivals in other countries. We are not the only people who have to deal with constructive perplexities, with the tendency to waste in large establishments, with inefficiency in high places, with indolence, with nepotism and favouritism, with professional pride and official obstinacy. And it is gratifying to find in these volumes testimony to the fact that at any rate, as regards France, these vices and defects are as rampant as is the case in England. We venture to think that in measuring our strength as compared with the Great Powers of the world, some allowance—not, of course, to an undue extent—should be made for the weaknesses of human nature, which is much the same the other side of the channel as in our own "neat little tight little island."

* "Naval Reform." From the French of the late M. Gabriel Charmes. Translated by J. E. Gordon Cumming. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

Another source of alarm arises from the possibility of invasion, M. Gabriel Charmes shows, and to our judgment conclusively, that unless our fleets are annihilated, it would be hopeless for any Power to attempt to land on these shores an army sufficient to disarm opposition and secure retreat in case of defeat. One or two "rams" would upset all the arrangements of the enemy, and "time" would fight against the invaders, inasmuch as it would take thirty-six vessels to convey across the channel an army of 30,000 men, and these latter could not do much in masking batteries and overrunning the country. This is at least consolatory to the timid.

The real point of interest, however, in these volumes is the question as to the navy of the future—of what is it to be composed? M. Gabriel Charmes points out with great force and effect that steam has entirely altered the condition of affairs. In the fine old days of yore, good seamanship in handling ships, aided by luck in getting the weather-gauge, was the all-important factor in naval warfare; then all vessels were much alike in size, construction, and rig. One nation differed from another nation chiefly as regards the numbers of their fleet—the elements were the same for all. Favourable weather befriended the enemy as well as his rival. In chase and pursuit it was "fair field and no favour." Running away was impossible with broken spars, damaged hulls, and decimated crews. Now all is altered. Seamanship is well-nigh a thing of the past; weather counts for little; steam does duty for everything. No two nations build ships alike in their aims and objects, and in the next great naval war who will win? "The nation," says M. Gabriel Charmes, "which possesses the fastest cruisers;" fight your weaker adversaries, scour the seas, ruin commerce, and run away when a more powerful cruiser appears in sight. Such are to be the tactics of the future. Therefore, says the French critic, break up your ironclads, and spend your money on light, swift vessels of war carrying sufficient weight of metal to sink a merchant vessel; and if you meet a man-o'-war, well, go to the bottom, if your heels won't save you. Of course if one nation, and one nation alone, adopted this somewhat ignoble fashion of fighting, there is much to be said in its favour; but, obviously if the arguments in support of such a policy be sound, they will commend themselves to the world at large. And when light, swift cruisers are the rule, and heavy, cumbersome ironclads the exception, who, then, will win the day? Why, surely, the nation which has both. Moreover, if the days of Confederate cruisers, such as the Sumner and Alabama, are to return, why should not trading vessels put a good gun or two on board, and not only give a long, stern chase when an enemy is seen on the offing, but also show fight if they are unable to run away? Each nation, therefore, by trying to guard against the dangers of defencelessness, would gradually revert to heavier ships and bigger armaments. To our judgment no nation would dare to break up its armoured-plated monitors; but we think it merits careful consideration whether there should not be attached a goodly fleet of pigmies able to scour the seas, to harass if not to kill, and when in difficulties rushing for protection to their bigger brethren of the deep. If, too, torpedoes are to form an important factor in the future history of naval warfare, the advantage of such craft as could blow out of the water these vampires of the ocean ere they shot forth their deadly missiles could scarcely be gainsaid. It would not be easy to get at an ironclad surrounded by a score of swift "sea swallows," skimming about here, there, and everywhere; while if one or two of these latter did get annihilated, the destruction of property and loss of life would be insignificant as compared with the sinking of a huge monster costing a million of money, and carrying upwards of a thousand men.

Everyone is interested in the question of "naval reform." Our national safety should not be a matter of indifference to even the meanest and humblest citizen of the Empire; and the readers of Mr. Gordon Cumming's admirable translation of M. Gabriel Charmes' most thoughtful work, will, it may be hoped, be as numerous as the importance of the subject ought to ensure.

GOLD AND SILVER.*

What is to be done in order to obviate the depreciation and the appreciation of the precious metals? "Let statisticians work hand-in-hand with political economists." Thus says Mr. Pollard, who endeavours to show that if the former prepare "index-numbers," showing the "price level" at successive periods, then the latter would apply these tables as a measure of value, and set at rest once and for all the terribly perplexing difficulty in regard to the silver and gold question. Mr. Pollard does not seem to think he has succeeded in conveying to the reader a general idea of his meaning. We confess that, so far as we are concerned, his anticipations of failure in this direction are, alas! only too well founded. So far as we can understand, the effect of that gentleman's proposal would be to make all money contracts subject to a sliding scale, determined according to the rate of wages prevalent at the time, but we are utterly unable to see how this is to be done. Dealings, for instance, between Calcutta and London would be guided by—what? The earning of a Bengali babu or a British artisan?—and who is to decide the point? What advantage, moreover, would such a plan possess in removing the inequalities which arise from a gold standard in one country having to come into contact with silver money in the other? However, as we own, we are completely in the dark as to the "matlab" which Mr. Pollard sets before him; we do not venture to criticise, but merely to call attention to a brochure which appears as if it were learned, and the value of which each reader must judge for himself.

LEGAL FACETIÆ.*

This volume, as its name implies, is a collection of bon-mots, facetiæ, &c., relating to the law, a profession which, to judge by the extracts here given from various writers of eminence, contains more rogues than honest men. We venture to think this is somewhat of a libel upon a useful and undoubtedly hard-working body of men, mostly recruited from the upper ten. Of course there are some black sheep in every community, but in the present day the most stringent measures are adopted to secure honesty amongst the limbs of the law, so that times are rather hard with "bad bargains" in that fraternity. However, be that as it may, all will relish the biting satire of this volume. Who cannot laugh at the epitaph,

"God works wonders now and then,
Here lies a lawyer and an honest man."

What is a Clerk of the Pipe? What, forsooth! Answer: A gentleman whose duty is—or rather was, for the post is abolished—to hold up the Lord Chancellor's hind clothes. This is a fact perhaps not generally known.

Here is an easy way to get a rich husband. A stylish lady sent one day to a solicitor known to be rich as Croesus, and asked him to make her will to the tune of £60,000. He complied, and, falling in love with the money, proposed to the fair charmer who had control thereof. She accepted; they were married, and then the husband discovered that his wife was an adventuress. This is really a clever enough ruse for a Yankee.

What strange names there are in Scotch law. How many persons would recognise the familiar thumbcrew in the odd guise of "pilliwinkies"?

"The will of Sennacherib was found in the royal library of Konyunjik." Humph, what an interesting fact! But where is Konyunjik?

Such are a few of the endless scraps which fall from the legal table. There is enough and to spare for everybody, and a few shillings might bespent worse than in purchasing "Legal Facetiæ," and frolicking amidst the quaint conceits, the funny quips, the humorous pleasantries of the dry old bags of bones to be found in the neighbourhood of Lincoln's-inn, Temple Bar, and such-like places of legal resort.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—The thirty-third ordinary general meeting of this Bank will be held on the 20th April. The general balance-sheet and profit and loss account to 31st December, 1886, show that the net profits for the year, together with £7,933 16s. 11d. brought forward, amount to £79,124 12s. 8d., and that after providing for bad and doubtful debts, and deducting the interim dividend which was paid in October last, the present balance is £34,740 17s. 10d., out of which the directors propose to declare a dividend for the second half of the year, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, free of Income-tax, which will leave a balance of £6,740 17s. 10d. to be carried forward.

CAPTAIN F. BURGESS, Military Accounts Department, has proceeded to Cawnpore for the examination of the Harness and Saddlery Factory accounts. This, says the Allahabad paper, is the initiative of a step which might be extended with advantage to the State. There would seem to be no reason whatever why the accounts of arsenals, factories and depots should not be examined and audited by trained accountants, and the present expensive luxury of auditing store account, in the shape of the Ordnance offices of each Presidency, abolished. The Government would gain in efficiency and pecuniarily by such a change. A post of travelling auditor should be established, say, one for Bengal, and one for Bombay and Madras combined; these officers should work immediately under the orders of the Director-General of Ordnance, and should not be under the Controller of Military Accounts. There is no apparent reason why the Ordnance Department in India should not be formed into two circles, North and South, each presided over by an Inspector-General of Ordnance, whose assistant should be the examiner or travelling auditor. It is farcical, to keep up three Inspectors-General of Ordnance, with their assistants, as at present, presided over by a Director-General. The over-officering of this Department in the higher grades should not have escaped the attention of the Finance Commission.

ALARMING RUMOURS.

REUTER and some of our contemporaries here are doing their best to produce another war scare. It is announced that alarming rumours have come to hand from Afghanistan, one of these reports asserting that some Ghilzais have advanced upon Cabul, and that the Ameer has fled to Peshawur, whilst another report says that he is dead. It is rumoured also that Khelat-i-Ghilzai has fallen, and that the rebels are marching on Candahar. According to one report the Ameer had sought the assistance of the British Government in India; according to another report his rebellious subjects had done so. But this was not all. The Russian Press had taken a sudden and lively interest in Afghan affairs, and had advocated the immediate taking of Herat by Russia, with the view to the speedy invasion of India. M. Barthelemy Saint-Hilaire, too, has just published a work on British India, tracing the gradual progress of the Russians towards that country during the last half century; and after pointing out the additional facilities which they will have in this respect by the railways being constructed by General Annenkoff, he comes to the conclusion that the Russians must sooner or later reach the Indus. Now amongst all the statements which have been published, much that is new is not true, and the little that is true is not new. That Afghanistan is always subject to a rising or rebellion against the ruler of the day by one or more of the turbulent tribes has been the chronic state of the country from its earliest history. The old rule which once held good in Europe that he should take who has the power, and he should keep who can, still obtains in that land of stones and budmashes. If the Ameer with his regulars is not able to put down insurrection amongst the Ghilzais he will very probably go to the wall, and somebody else will reign for a little in his stead. As the present ruler appears anxious to keep on friendly terms with the English, this would be matter for regret, but not a reason for the Government of India to send men or munitions of war to Cabul. But although it was well known that the Ghilzais were giving trouble, it was also known that there had, up to the latest possible date at which intelligence could reach British India, been no combination of the tribes against the Ameer. He himself had been engaged in issuing a somewhat incomprehensible pamphlet about a possible Holy War, in which, however, there was one shrewd suggestion to the effect that all who engaged for this war should serve him without pay. If wars could be entered upon under the same condition amongst civilised nations, peace would very soon be assured, and panics on the Stock Exchange become things of the past. But whilst these rumours have been telegraphed home the British Envoy at Cabul, after having had an interview with the Viceroy at Saharanpore, is quietly returning to the Afghan capital, to which an English engineer, accompanied by several skilled mechanics, is also proceeding for the purpose of erecting workshops and machinery for the development of iron and coal mines, which it is said have been found in the Ameer's territory to a valuable extent.

The news about the mines may encourage the Russian newspapers to more strenuously advocate an immediate advance upon Herat, and it may be accepted as a fact—painful though it may be to many alarmists—that Russia can take Herat when she chooses. All that M. Barthelemy Saint-Hilaire has written about Russian approaches towards India may also be accepted as facts, but facts of ancient history. Russia is hardly prepared for an invasion of British India yet, in spite of the rapid progress of her strategic railways eastward. The conquest of England's Oriental Empire—if it be the waking dream of Muscovite ambition—is also a thought to which England is now wide awake. The British sentinel with his Sikh Goorkha and Sepoy comrades is on the ramparts, and behind the magnificent barriers by which nature guards our splendid possessions, are gallant soldiers and loyal feudatories who are ready for the shock of battle when it comes. There may be cause for watchfulness; there is none for fear.

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.—IV.

[COMMUNICATED.]

In addition to that aspect of Bimetallism which only embraces the application of the theory to and between England and India there is the comprehensive view of the question which would include all the world in a cosmopolitan scheme of unfluctuating exchange. Such an international arrangement would be undoubtedly beneficial in its results if equitably adjusted with substantial guarantees for its permanent continuance, but the difficulties that would attend the negotiation of a universal treaty of exchange may be classed as positively insurmountable. Before such a commercial benefit could be made operative every nation, empire, and petty independent State would have to be enrolled in one sublime confederation, and would have to agree to reduce their conflicting interests and multitudinous wishes and ideas to one inflexible code. Any merchant who has a limited knowledge of the practically insuperable obstacles that perpetually block proposed arrangements between, say, fifty business men where the interests are conflicting, but the advantages of agreement obvious, is well aware how an obstinate and avaricious minority prevents the adoption of prudent measures; and any politician having the most superficial acquaintance with international treaties knows full well how hard they are to arrange, how frequently they are violated, and how ephemeral the very best are in the duration of their unaltered existence. How, then, can it be imagined by any astute financier or political economist that the bare opportunity exists for nations that are at peace, and kingdoms that are at war, for empires that are powerful and States that are insignificant, for republics that are civilised and monarchies that are semi-barbarous, to form a magnificent council of arbitration in which to discuss and unravel the problems of currency, to unanimously arrive at a solution of all difficulties, and to agree without a dissentient to a cosmopolitan fixed ratio of exchange between gold and silver.

To rehabilitate silver it is proposed that the relative value between the two currencies shall be permanently fixed at a proportion of fifteen and a-half to one, which arrangement would fictitiously increase the present value of silver about thirty-five per cent., or it might depreciate gold to the same extent, or, what is more probable, silver might be appreciated about seventeen per cent. on the one hand, and gold depreciated to the same figure on the other, so as practically to adjust the balances of average profit and loss. For the purposes of argumentation we will follow the generally accepted idea that the fixing of a ratio of exchange on the proposed lines would not only enhance the nominal value of the rupee from 1s. 6d., or the current quotation to 2s., but would create a real increase of about thirty-five per cent. in the permanent standard value of silver. Now, the effect such a ratio would have upon the future coining of money would be important, and must not be overlooked, because it contains the germ of the solution of the whole problem. The question arises as to who would get the profit on the bar silver. We will imagine that the Indian Government determined to mint ten millions' sterling in silver currency. If the uncoined metal retained its market price the Government, by purchasing at a purely commercial quotation, would secure a profit of two-and-a-half millions, whereas if the assumed international assembly was so short-sighted as to fix the ratio of value upon mere bullion, the silver owners would net the enormous gain, which would have the immediate effect of increasing the price of shares in silver mining enterprises to the extent of thirty-five per cent. But we may safely assume that the various governments, through their signatories to the treaty, would elect to appropriate to their respective exchequers the profit arising from the new monetary arrangement, so that in effect coined silver, and not bullion, would be rehabilitated. Now, as there would be a differentiation of values, and a fluctuating exchange between coined and uncoined silver, the collective governments of the world would be responsible for the difference between the nominal and intrinsic value of the currency in the same way as the English Government, after making profit on the silver and copper coinage, is in reality the guarantor for the nominal value of the shilling and the penny. But it will be seen that the great empires would be answerable for the agreed fictitious value of the currency of petty States; and a poor kingdom, by flooding the world with silver money, could add considerably to its revenue. Then, in the event of war between any two countries, in the case of the absorption of one State into another, or in the possible result of one or more nations withdrawing from the treaty, the whole arrangement would be terribly confused, and confidence in its stability weakened. A bankrupt or annihilated government could not redeem its silver coinage; belligerent nations would not allow the money of their enemies to pass current; and thus, in a short time the value of a coin would be gauged by the credit of the country where it was minted. Hence there would arise an intricate system of exchange, varying with every war rumour, altering with every new alliance, hampering all commercial transactions, and entailing loss on unwary merchants. We may, therefore, safely conclude that cosmopolitan Bimetallism is theoretically feasible, but its practical application would prove utterly unworkable for any lengthened period of time, even if some gigantic genius could accomplish the impossible feat of creating universal treaty rights.

THE troopship Orontes, which was expected to arrive at Bombay on the 15th inst. from Portsmouth, will not reach until the 24th inst.

A CONTEMPORARY'S Delhi correspondent writes :—"The feeling between Hindoos and Mahomedans is much more friendly now than any one hoped or expected, and we hope that nothing may occur for some time to disturb the apparently peaceful atmosphere. I may add that the credit of bringing about the reconciliation is, in the city, chiefly given to the Rev. G. A. Lefroy, of the Cambridge Mission. If report speaks truly, great kudos must be given to that gentleman for the tact and ability he has displayed in dealing with a very delicate question."

LIEUT.-COLONEL CAMPBELL-WALKER.—Much regret was felt amongst a wide circle of friends and acquaintances at the news of the death of Lieut. Colonel Campbell-Walker, which took place at Brighton on the 2nd inst. Although the deceased officer was more immediately remembered in England as a favourite amongst the Gentlemen-at-Arms in Her Majesty's Body Guard, to which corps he was appointed in 1869, and as a staunch Conservative who had fought two tough electioneering contests in the interests of his party, he was known in India as a gallant officer who did good service in the trying times of the Mutiny in the 79th Cameron Highlanders. As A.D.C. to Sir John Douglas he was present at the siege and capture of Lucknow, and the subsequent operations with the Azimgurh Field Force. He had the distinction of being mentioned three times in despatches, once by Lord Clyde in his despatch to Lord Canning, dated from the Camp Martiniere, Lucknow. Colonel Campbell Walker was no ornamental soldier, but went in thoroughly to master the details of his profession. After returning from the Crimea he obtained a "double-first" certificate for musketry at Hythe, and wrote a very able text-book on that subject. Well read, observant, and holding the pen of a graceful, ready writer, he made his way into the higher journalistic circles, where his contributions touching on current and important questions of the day were always welcomed as interesting and valuable. As a genial, pleasant companion his loss will be felt in society. He was buried on Wednesday last in the quiet but picturesque cemetery at Berkhamstead, and standing beside his too early grave were many brother officers and old friends, who had journeyed down by train to pay their last mournful tribute of respect to one whose worth they knew as a soldier, and whose memory they will long hold in kindest regard.

DEATH OF MR. H. B. FENWICK.—We regret to have to announce the death at the early age of forty-six of Mr. H. B. Fenwick, the Assistant Engineer to the Calcutta Municipality. Mr. Fenwick was taken ill with an attack of congestion of the liver early in January, and his condition became so bad that he was brought down from his house at Munirampur to the General Hospital, where he remained ever since. On Sunday last (March 20) he got worse, and his wife was telegraphed for, but she arrived too late. He died on Monday morning from relapse brought on by the liver complaint. By his death the Municipality has lost one of its cleverest and most hard working and energetic servants. It is no exaggeration to say that he worked from daylight to darkness on behalf of his employers; he may be said literally to have died in harness.—Englishman.

THE Bengal Reliefs for the ensuing year have been published. The external moves are the following:—Artillery—D-4, Agra to England; E-4, Allahabad to England; 5-1 Lancashire, Calcutta to Aden; 6-1, Southern Rangoon to Bombay. Cavalry—6th Dragoon Guards, Sialkote to Mhow. Infantry—1st South Yorkshire, Dinapore to England. Internal moves: Artillery—Battery, England to Meerut; Battery, England to Allahabad; No. 1 Scottish, Aden to Allahabad; Battery, England to Quetta; Battery, England to Delhi; Battery, England to Fort William; Battery, England to Fort Govindghur. Cavalry—7th Dragoon Guards, Mhow to Sialkote.

CAPTAIN C. TOWSEND, R.A., Assistant Superintendent of Factories, is re-appointed for a further term of three years.

LIEUT.-COLONEL RIVAZ, of the 4th Sikhs, gets command of one of the Sikh regiments that are now to be raised.

LIEUT. A. M. HONNOCKS, 2nd Battalion Royal Dublin Fusiliers, has been appointed to be Adjutant of the Poona Volunteer Corps.

LIEUT. L. H. REID, Wing Officer 27th Punjab Infantry, who received a bullet in his leg in action with the dacoits, has been invalided home.

CAPTAIN W. H. DOBIE, Royal Artillery, has been re-appointed to the Ordnance Department for a further term of five years, with effect from the 23rd July, 1887.

COLONEL J. CRAVER ROBERTS, Commanding the 2nd Battalion Norfolk Regiment, has been allowed to proceed to England in anticipation of his being placed on half-pay on the 1st May next, on completion of his term of regimental command.

SURGEON MORAN, M.D., Civil Surgeon, Buldana, proceeds on furlough, and in all probability will not return to the Berars. There is a rumour also that Surgeon-Major Little, M.D., Sanitary Commissioner, H.A.D., proceeds on leave at no distant date.

SURGEON-GENERAL SIMPSON, the head of the medical department, is going on leave shortly, when Dr. Walker, deputy surgeon-general in the North-West Provinces, will officiate at headquarters. As Dr. Walker is retiring next autumn, it seems probable that his place in the North-West, where he has done so much good work, will know him no more.

CONSEQUENT on Lieut.-Colonel J. G. D. Walker (M.S.C.), Commandant 4th Cavalry, Hyderabad Contingent, obtaining one year's furlough to Europe, Major Cummins, Second-in-Command, now on Transport duty in Burma, will officiate as Commandant. Lieutenant E. L. Wright, 2nd Cavalry, Burma, has also obtained a year's furlough to Europe. Lieut. Whittall, 1st Infantry, has been directed to join the Field Force in Upper Burma.

CERTAIN changes in the mode of working the Commissariat Department and Transport Branch will shortly be made on the lines recommended by the special committee which sat at Simla last year. The effect will be to free the headquarters department from much trivial work, fuller powers being vested in the Commissaries-General in charge of the various circles. The post of Personal Assistant at headquarters has been abolished.

BRIGADE SURGEON MACDOWALL, I.M.S., retires from the service from April 1 on a pension of £700. Dr. MacDowall was in the Crimean campaign in 1855-6, serving with the Turkish contingent at Kertch, took part in the Persian expedition in the following year, and was present at the capture of Mohumra. He also assisted in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny in 1857-9, being present at the capture of Hulgulsee, and taking part in the operations against rebel Dessais in the Southern Mahratta country. He was again on war service in 1867-8, when he joined the Abyssinian expedition, being present at the storming of Magdala.

MAJOR W. G. C. JOHNSTONE, Second in Command 1st Infantry (now on furlough), has been appointed Commandant 3rd Infantry, vice Colonel Way, who has returned to the Madras Army and been appointed to a Brigade Command. Major Salmon and Captain Orr, 3rd Infantry, now in Burma, have been appointed Commandant and Second in Command respectively pro tem. till the return of Major Johnstone from furlough. These appointments give Captain A. Abye the permanent Second in Command of 1st Infantry, H.C., vice Major Johnstone. The removal of the infantry regiments takes place in November next. Brigadier-General Stewart is expected in Bolarum about the middle of next month from Burma, unless provided for in his own Presidency.

THE question of the rearmament of the Native Army in India has passed into another phase. It was stated some time ago that it was under consideration to issue 50,000 or 60,000 Martini-Henry rifles to regiments likely to be called upon first for active service; and then it was practically decided that such an issue should be made as the rifles were available in India. The military authorities in this country had, in fact, grown weary of the delays at home in respect of the settlement of the new arm, and it seemed advisable to utilise the best rifle that we had to its fullest extent. But with unexpected promptness the Ordnance Committee in England have, after finally rejecting the much-talked-of Martini-Enfield, adopted the Lee magazine rifle as the standard small-arm of the future. The Lee, it is said, is to be turned out from the manufactories at a rate which will enable the army in India to receive the new arm in a much shorter time than has ever before been anticipated, when changes were under consideration; and this being so it has been resolved to postpone for the present any issue of the Martini-Henry to the Native Army. It has not been absolutely determined that the Martinis shall under no circumstances be given to our sepoy.

THE WAR TROPHIES COURTS.

The whole aim of this section is to illustrate the Victories of War by a collection of Armour, Arms (including Artillery), Accoutrements, Flags, Medals, and Orders, as well as Characteristic Portraits and Pictures of Engagements. Official and Private Documents and Books—in fact, all that is illustrative of the People, the Country, and the Campaign in each particular War during Her Majesty's reign, 1837-1887. In this way the collection is intended to serve an Educational as well as a Patriotic purpose. The progress in the equipment of our Naval and Military forces will be clearly demonstrated by the comparison of the old and the new. A special feature will be made of the Decorations gained during this period.

Every effort is being made to make this Court complete, and for this purpose loans of any of the above-mentioned articles are particularly invited. Insurance has been most amply arranged for. Transport will be

THE
AND

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette
has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on especially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service
Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux
of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO. Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, the Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This assertion is necessary, as many persons desire purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co. Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera, Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, DYSPEPSIA, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cures short attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBSTANTIAL IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

MONDAY, APRIL 18, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 1st April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 30th March; and from Calcutta to the 29th March.

H.E. THE VICEROY opened the Gunduck Bridge on March 30th.

THE members of the Bengal Civil Service entertained Sir A. Rivers Thompson, the retiring Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, at a dinner at the United Service Club, Calcutta, on March 22nd. Sir Rivers was also presented with an address by the members of the Mahomedan Literary Society.

A FAREWELL dinner was given to Sir Edward and Lady Bradford at Abu on March 22nd, on their departure for Rajputana.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON, the retiring Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, was presented with a number of farewell addresses at Lahore on the 24th March. In reply his Honour expressed his gratification that he left the Punjab in profound peace, even in its remotest borders, and said that he should always entertain an affectionate regard for the province in which he began his Indian career.

A PETITION has been presented to Government by the inhabitants of the Kaira Zilla in favour of Mr. G. H. D. Wilson, Collector of the district, who was suspended recently by the Bombay Government.

SIR W. WEDDERBURN, of the Bombay Civil Service, retires shortly. Steps are being taken to raise a permanent memorial in his honour.

THE Court of Inquiry, which assembled to investigate the irregularities reported in connection with the shooting for the Western India Rifle Association match at Bangalore, has concluded its sittings, and, after a searching inquiry, exonerates the whole of the members who took part in the contest.

A CONFERENCE in connection with the silk trade in Bengal has been held in Calcutta.

THE Maharajah Holkar leaves Bombay for England by the last steamer in April. Sir Lepel Griffin accompanies his Highness.

A STATUE of Sir Richard Temple, who preceded Sir James Fergusson in the Governorship of Bombay, was unveiled by H.E. Lord Reay on March 31.

THE statue of Lord Lawrence, which was presented some twelve months ago to the Lahore Municipality by Mr. Boehm, the celebrated sculptor, was unveiled by Sir Charles Aitchison on March 30. The pedestal on which the statue will stand has been designed by the sculptor, and is constructed of Nowshera marble.

THE Bombay Town Council have passed a resolution recommending the Corporation to sanction a special grant of Rs. 80,000 in aid of the funds of the Victoria Technical Institute.

THE Bombay Municipal Corporation have passed a resolution expressing regret at the death of Major-General Hancock, R.E., and placing on record their high sense of the services rendered by him to the city in connection with the Corporation.

THE Hon. W. S. Whiteside, Madras Member of the Viceregal Legislative Council, has been re-appointed collector of Tanjore, and Mr. W. Wilson, now on leave, succeeds him as third Member of the Board of Revenue. Mr.

Wilson, however, has obtained extension of furlough for one year, and Mr. Whiteside will act as third member of the Board during Mr. Wilson's absence, or until further orders.

IT is probable that Sir Charles Elliott will succeed Sir Theodore Hope as Member of Council for the Public Works Department, and that an English Financier will be brought out to take the place of Sir Auckland Colvin as Finance Minister.

MR. J. F. FINLAY, the Under-Secretary to the Government of India in the Financial Department, on his return from leave, will, in all probability, officiate as Accountant-General, Bengal.

THE department specially created some seventeen years ago for the Statistical Survey and Imperial Gazetteer of India has been dissolved at Simla by Sir W. W. Hunter, its first and last chief.

THE Bengal Administration Report complains of the attitude of the Native Press, saying that there is too often the exhibition of a spirit of rancorous hostility to the European community made with the deliberate intention of keeping alive race differences.

THE 2,000 men for the Burma Police now being raised by volunteering from the Native Army, as distinct from those recruiting in the districts, will be equipped at Calcutta and sent off in batches to Rangoon.

THE men belonging to corps in Burma, under orders for India, appear to have had enough of that country. Few of them are, a Rangoon paper says, accepting the liberal terms offered for three years' service in the police force.

MR. HUGHES, the Assistant Collector, Bhosawul, received twenty-three teeth and claw wounds from a wounded tiger, and died from exhaustion and nervous shock.

THE Government of India have decided that when inferior servants of the State voluntarily apply to retire before they are entitled to any pension or gratuity, they must furnish a written statement to the effect that they fully understand the consequence of their so doing.

A RANGOON paper reports that Inspector H. Fryer, son of the late Mining Geologist to the Government of India, has been shot dead by dacoits in the Ngathaingyoung district.

OBITUARY.—MR. H. Dangerfield, Manager and Chief Engineer of Bhowmuggur-Gondal Railway, and Chief Engineer of the Junagadh State Railway; the Nawab of Rampore; Mr. Herbert Alfred Hughes, Bombay Civil Service, Assistant Collector, Khandesh.

GREAT ROBBERY OF JEWELLERY AT TUTICORIN.—A very daring and ingenious theft is reported to have occurred at Tuticorin, on the night of the 19th February, when property, consisting of valuable jewellery and Native utensils, was made away with, to the tune of Rs. 2,50,000. A correspondent writes:—"It may be generally known to your readers that H.E. Gapraji Thappa Sing, the Nepalese Commander-in-Chief, has been for some time engaged in a tour through the peninsula, making a short stay at important towns and places of note. This gentleman is attended by a large retinue; and, in his tour, he seems to be provided with all the luxuries and ostentation that can suggest themselves to oriental conception and fancy. Amongst his suite, I am told, are to be found a brilliant assembly of ladies, numbering no less than sixty! During his stay at Tuticorin, Mr. Gapraji Thappa Sing rented a large house for the accommodation of himself and his retinue; and everything seems to have passed off quietly and well, till the morning of his departure to Rameswaram, when, to the blank astonishment of every one in the camp, it was found that a box, or basket, containing valuable jewels, precious stones, and vessels of gold and silver, some of which were intended as offerings to the presiding deity at Rameswaram, had disappeared. It seems the box containing these valuables was kept for the night in a room set apart for the ladies; and somebody, discovering the secret, very adroitly effected an entrance into the room, by making a passage through the roof and succeeded in carrying away the box. Local police detective ability and ingenuity are being exercised.

Notes of the Week.

THE papers which have come to hand by the present Overland Mail are chiefly taken up with the details of Sir Auckland Colvin's Budget, and comments thereon. So far as the Anglo-Indian Press is concerned, the Finance Minister's statement has been accepted with that sensible philosophy which inculcates resignation to the fate which cannot be avoided. The absorption of the Famine Insurance Fund is not, of course, a master-stroke of finance, nor an act for congratulation. This reserve fund was, when first inaugurated, hedged about in such a protective manner as to give assurance that it was considered sacred and inviolable, and only to be used for the purposes intended. Now that it has been entrenched upon famine railways and famine reliefs must be arranged for from loans, and not out of income. Opinions will, of course, differ as to the wisdom of this policy.

It is to be regretted no doubt that no margin is now left for famine contingencies, but it is satisfactory to know that India is now, owing to the extension of railways and irrigation works, much better equipped to meet any such contingencies than she ever was before. Her credit is high, and where loans are required for the construction of new railways, there will be no difficulty in raising them upon favourable terms.

THE revision of the Provincial Contracts is, however, a rather sore subject, especially with the Mofussil Press, which questions the morality of the Supreme Government laying its hands upon the balances held by the Local Governments. As might have been expected, the Allahabad journal complains that henceforth there can be no elasticity in provincial finance. "Not only do the provinces begin with smaller incomes, but if by wise economies and careful management they increase the revenues, the greater part of the revenues, even during the contract, goes to the Supreme Government." This crippling policy is no doubt unfortunate, and must, perhaps, to a certain extent, hinder the development of provincial administration. But Sir Auckland Colvin's excuse is that he had no help for it.

THE Times correspondent has thought it necessary to telegraph to his journal a number of criticisms upon the Budget from the vernacular papers, which he acknowledges, however, leave what is fairly open to criticism untouched, and base their hostility upon the fact that the Budget is the work of an English financier. The enterprise of the Times in publishing every Monday a lengthy telegram from India is highly to be commended, but it is to be regretted that the enterprise at the other end of the wire is not tempered with more knowledge and discretion. The latest news from India might be useful and interesting reading, but it is hardly worth while to telegraph as Indian public opinion the gup of the Calcutta Bar library or of the Bengal Club, which the present correspondent is in the habit of doing. The half-column of this morning's Times which is taken up with extracts from the vernacular press, was certainly not worth a tenth of what it cost to wire. The quotations give no real insight into the true sentiments of the people, and the papers named have little influence beyond their own immediate circle of readers.

OF course the Calcutta Native Press is the most virulent in its abuse—one journal declaring that Lord Dufferin has arbitrarily done away with the famine fund in order to carry on railways which can only benefit Anglo-Indians and British merchants, and another journal (published in English) insisting that that fund has been devoted to "the unholy use of the Burma war, adding horrors to that war and to the sufferings of a brave and unhappy people vainly struggling for their birthright." This is one of the results of our English way of educating the Bengali Babú for a higher position in the administration of his country. The Times correspondent mildly sums up the matter with the remark that in his opinion these criticisms "leave a strong impression that the Native Press must learn a lesson of fairness as well as moderation before it can hope to carry weight." If the correspondent has only just come to that conclusion he has been a little slow in forming his opinion.

ON one point our Anglo-Indian contemporaries express the same views as we did when the Budget statement was telegraphed to England. The tender of the Gwalior Durbar for 3½ millions of the 5½ millions to be borrowed during the year for public works, is considered as perhaps the most satisfactory item in Sir Auckland Colvin's statement. "No more effective reply," says the Pioneer, "could be given to the insinuations of the Russian Press as to the loyalty of the Native Princes of India. The leading Mahratta State invests its savings in the British Empire, implying thereby its belief in its permanence and its resolve to support its credit." The only comment in the Native Press is suo more, to hint that the loan has been obtained by pressure put on the Council of the Gwalior Regency.

BUT, pressure or no pressure, it is to be hoped that other Native States, in which it is known vast hoards of treasure have been accumulated, will follow the bright example of Gwalior. The coming of Holkar to England will no doubt help to this end, and aid in other ways to make stronger the loyalty of our Indian feudatories, and give them greater confidence in the greatness and stability of British rule. It is possible that Sir Lepel Griffin has had some little difficulty in getting the arrangement carried out, but he knows what good will ensue from such a visit, and it is to be hoped that Lord Dufferin will show some public approval of the Maharaja's step, so that other great chiefs may "go and do likewise."

A CONTEMPORARY suggests a novel way of solving the difficulty of the Afghan question. Afghanistan, it is allowed, is in a state of anarchy, and may fall under Russian influence any day. It is said that Russian intrigue and Russian roubles are now playing an important part in Cabul. This may be so, although it is possible that the Russians will find the Afghans as troublesome friends as the English have done. But the contemporary to whom we have referred would have Afghanistan under British influence, and this is how it is suggested that that desirable end should be brought about:—"We can safely say"—this is the text—"that if the military element in Afghanistan could be stamped out, if the turbulent Sirdars could be transplanted into Upper Barma, and their lawless soldiers could be absorbed in the British army, Cabul and Candahar would rapidly become the emporiums of trade." Not a doubt of it. For there is nothing that prevents it, "if" all that is suggested could be done. But then there is sometimes much difficulty as well as much virtue in your "If."

THE Times of India comments upon a grievance which it is said is being much felt by the officers of the Indian armies:—

The attention recently directed to the fact that the Viceroy has not a single officer of the Indian Army upon his staff has led the Statesman to see how the staffs of other high Indian officials are constituted. The results are as follows:—

	Number on Staff.	Indian Officers
Viceroy of India ...	9	0
C-in-C. of India ...	7	1
Governor of Bombay ...	6	2
C-in-C. of Bombay ...	3	1
Governor of Madras ...	7	0
C-in-C. of Madras ...	3	1

In the case, both of Bombay and Madras, the figures include two civilians as private secretaries. There are thus thirty-three military men in all upon the personal staff, of whom three only belong to the Indian Army. Our contemporary attributes this remarkable state of affairs to the pressure which is put upon every Governor or high official to find employment upon his staff for the scions of wealthy families at home. It states that "when a certain Governor, who shall be nameless, was lately nominated in England, it is reported that he was at once visited by a prince and a duke, each soliciting an appointment for a friend. How the Duke's protégé fared may readily be imagined. Under the circumstances he was, of course, nowhere, and must have felt, well—like an Indian officer. In fact in these days it may be said that when high functionaries dispose of their patronage they are strictly guided, as of course they ought to be, by that most honourable maxim, Noblesse oblige."

A BURMA correspondent, writing to a Madras contemporary, says that the local police (Shans) are an utter failure, and should never have been started. They are not amenable to discipline, and never will be, going out and coming in when they like, and doing as they like generally. When they are out on any duty they fire off their guns, using Government ammunition, for their own amusement. They quarrel with their companions in arms, the Punjabis, and are in every way most unsatisfactory. They are paid at the same rate (viz., Rs. 14 to Rs. 16 per mensem) as the Punjabi Police, i.e., nearly double the pay of Sepoys of the regular army, much to the latter's disgust. In fact, they are gentlemen at large and know it, and do just what they please.

THE REV. JULIAN ROBINSON, the first and most brilliant editor of the Pioneer, can justly boast that his sons have inherited no little of their father's literary ability and journalistic skill. One son, Mr. Kay Robinson, who went a short time ago to India to assist on the staff of the Allahabad paper, has now succeeded to the editorship of the Civil and Military Gazette, rendered vacant by the retirement of Mr. Wheeler—the son, by the way, of another Anglo-Indian literary celebrity and journalist, Mr. Talboys Wheeler. Phil Robinson, who was long a power on the Pioneer, but who has since made a name for himself in Europe and America, goes next month on a lecturing tour to Australia with every chance of making a brilliant success. If he only tells the savages of the Antipodes some of the tales which he has told the Savages of the Savoy he will certainly create a sensation.

"CALL no man happy until he dies," said the ancient sage, which aphorism might to-day be modified to "Call no ruler miserable until a statue has been erected to him." It is seven years since Sir Richard Temple resigned the Governorship of Bombay, and a statue has just been unveiled to his honour in that city. The auspicious occasion will be taken advantage of to review Sir Richard's Indian career, and to paint it in colours according to the artistic handiwork of flatterers or foes, for no one will more readily allow than the ex-Proconsul himself that he has met with both. Happily, however, he has some staunch friends who have ever recognised the sterling qualities of the man, and who have remained firm in their allegiance through all times of doubt or storm. It does not fall to the lot of every Governor of a Province to read, seven years after he has laid down the reins of office, that those who have now erected a statue to him would prefer to have him again amongst them in the flesh, and have never ceased to regret his somewhat hasty departure from them. "Sir Richard Temple," says the Times of India, "during the three years of his abridged Governorship, impressed the most vigorous and Europeanised community in India by his energy, his ubiquity, his untiring activity, and his skill and tact in the work of administration." Had he remained in Bombay the opinion is that he would have secured the Viceroyalty under a Liberal Government. It is not impossible that he may secure it yet under a Conservative one.

THE first question in the English paper for the intermediate examination of the Punjab University asks the candidate to explain, "in his own language," various passages from the books he is supposed to have read. The English paper for the B.A. examination asks what trace of feminine tenderness there is to be found in Lady Macbeth, to give an account of Milton's domestic life, and to show how the conflict between the old Cavalier world and the new Puritan world is reflected in Lycidus.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 17.

On Thursday a deputation of the citizens of Calcutta waited on Sir Stuart Bayley and presented an address of congratulation on his assumption of office as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. Sir Stuart Bayley, in replying, alluded to the great difficulties of that office, among others to the task of reconciling conflicting interests. He hoped that time and common sense and the good feeling of moderate men of both parties would do much to restore harmony. He also expressed the hope that Bengal might now be entering on a period of prosperity, but he could not forget how small was the margin in Bengal between production and consumption, and how easily a bad season might absorb that margin. There was no chance of his administration being marked by any great financial prosperity, as the supreme Government had wisely determined to reduce provincial resources rather than resort to new taxation. There was nothing for it, therefore, but by the strictest economy to try to make the diminished resources go as far as possible.

On Friday the Lieutenant-Governor unveiled the statue of Sir Ashley Eden in the presence of a considerable assembly. Sir Stuart Bayley made a long speech, in which he traced Sir Ashley Eden's Indian career from the beginning, and described him as one of the most successful Lieutenant-Governors that Bengal ever had. He could himself bear witness to Sir Ashley Eden's strength of character, sound common sense, and extraordinary mental quickness and acuteness. He had an intuitive faculty for getting at salient facts, and he was remarkable also for his genuine sympathy with the Natives. The statue, which is by Mr. Boehm, has been erected in Dalhousie-square, opposite to the Bengal Secretariat.

A much-needed reform, the credit of which is due to Sir Rivers Thompson, has been promulgated since he left the country. For some years past there has been a growing practice of appointing very junior civilians to be Under-Secretaries to the Government and keeping them in the Secretariat for many years. The disadvantages of this practice were first recognised by the Punjab Government, which some time ago resolved to limit the tenure of office of an Under-Secretary to four years. The Bengal Government has now followed that example, and has gone even further. It has ordered that henceforth the tenure of Under-Secretaryships in civil departments shall be limited to a term ordinarily of three years, which may be extended under special circumstances. The reason given is that while Secretariat training is useful to young officers it is not so important as direct experience of the working of the administrative machine, and of the feelings of the people, which can only be gained by district work.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 17.

Little authentic news has been received during the last week, although a number of vague reports are flying about. The Punjab frontier is a regular hotbed of such rumours, many of them of the wildest nature, and everything coming thence should be received with the greatest caution. The only thing certain is that the Turans and Burans, the two great southern sections of the Ghilzai tribe, have risen. It is possible, if not probable, that the remainder of the tribe have joined the insurrection by this time. There seems to have been some fighting about Ghuzni, and the Governor of Maraf has been killed by the Hotaks, a clan of the Turan section. The insurgents are said to have offered the throne to a local Moolah, who refused on religious grounds, but advised them to make Mir Alam Khan, son of the late Mushki Alam, their Ameer.

The postal route between Cabul and Candahar is still open according to latest accounts, and no important place had fallen, but the Ameer is said to be showing signs of anxiety. The reports that the Ghilzais are advancing against Cabul, that the Ameer has fled, that he is dead, and so on, have no foundation.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, APRIL 17.

Mr. Crosthwaite, who has returned from the Ruby Mines, proceeds on the 18th to Rangoon. He will remain six weeks in Lower Burma, where he is required on urgent business, and then returns to Mandalay. During his visit to the Ruby Mines Mr. Crosthwaite was much struck by the prosperous appearance of the people, who seems more thriving and civilised than the peasantry of the plains.

It is authoritatively announced that, if Streeter's syndicate agree to certain rules recently framed, the Government intend granting them a five years' lease of the Ruby Mines at a yearly rental of four lakhs of rupees. This proposal to dispose of the Ruby Mines to gentlemen hitherto unconnected with Burma at a lower rent than could be obtained in the open market, without offering the mines to public competition, and while all rivals have been rigidly excluded from visiting the mines, excites much dissatisfaction in commercial circles.

While at the Ruby Mines Mr. Crosthwaite had interviews with the important Shan Chiefs of Momeit and Maiolung. They submitted and undertook to pay for their territories an annual revenue assessed by Mr. Crosthwaite. Many Shan Chiefs are still holding aloof. Mr. Hildebrand, Commissioner to the Shan States, who is in the southern part of the Shan country, has as yet made little progress in obtaining the submission of the Chiefs. The weather is now intensely hot in Upper Burma and the movement of troops is difficult. With the beginning of hot weather a renewal of disturbances is anticipated. So far the disturbances have been much less than was expected. Dacoit bands have assembled on the West Moo river. Troops have been sent to disperse them.

One very unfortunate affair has occurred. Three hundred dacoits burnt Sinbyogyoon, a large village on the west bank of the Irrawaddy above Minbo, and carried off the loyal Burmese Thugyi of the village, whom they then hacked in pieces. Sinbyogyoon was occupied by thirty Sepoys and twenty military police. None of the assailants, however, were killed or wounded. This band succeeded the same night in firing the outskirts of the neighbouring town of Salinmyo, which is strongly garrisoned, and a large number of houses were burned. These attacks, although made in Boshway's country, are not believed to have been made by the remains of his band, but by the men from the You country. Fuller inquiry appears to prove that Boshway has not been killed.

The civil and military authorities are agreed that the time has come when the police should gradually take over many of the military posts in Upper Burma and assume the charge of the country. Troops are being gradually concentrated at convenient strategical centres in support of the police. The movement has to be carried out cautiously and without relaxation of vigilance. Though the elements of disturbance are scattered and broken they are still present. If the dacoits were not closely watched they would resume their depredations on a large scale.

An outbreak of prisoners occurred lately in Mingyan Gaol. The sentries were overpowered. Seven prisoners escaped, but four were killed and several wounded while trying to escape.

Colonel Prothero, C.S.I., Assistant Adjutant-General to the Burmese field force, having been appointed Assistant Adjutant-General to the Madras Army, leaves for India by this mail. Colonel Prothero's promotion has given much satisfaction here, where he has enjoyed deserved popularity. Colonel Prothero assumed office immediately after the capture of Mandalay, and has since served without interruption. During the past troublesome and trying sixteen months he has displayed marked ability and greatly contributed to the success achieved.

The Times of India says:—Colonel Malleson and Mr. Charles Marvin have been arguing on diametrically opposite lines as to the point where England could with most effect strike a blow at Russia. The former advocates a campaign in the Caucasus, on the assumptions that the advent of an English invading force would be the signal for a rising against the Czar amongst the peoples there, that with the aid of these allies the Russian communications in the Caspian Sea might be cut, and that the Muscovite troops would be thereby called away from the attack on the Indian frontier. Mr. Marvin vigorously combats every one of these assumptions, and the weight of the argument is so wholly on his side that he may be excused the cynical insinuation that Colonel Malleson must by mistake have forwarded for publication an article written some eight or ten years ago. The data on which Colonel Malleson builds his arguments have been quite swept away by recent events. To send an English force to the Caspian by way of the Caucasus would in the opinion of ninety-nine military men out of a hundred be now an all but impossible task. To count on the chance of our being aided by any insurrectionary movement would be at best the most frail of reeds to lean on. Moreover, the likelihood of any such revolt occurring has been almost entirely done away with by the completion of the Russian railway system in the Caucasus and by the planting there of a thoroughly loyal Russian population. But the scheme is not merely one of insuperable difficulty; even if carried out it would not effect in the slightest degree the object in view, namely, the cutting of the Russian communications in Central Asia. As Mr. Marvin vividly puts it, the temporary loss of the Caucasus to Russia would be no more felt than the temporary loss of New Zealand in our own case. In a word, to fight our way to Baku would involve a campaign on an immense scale, if our forces ever got there they would be met by hordes of Russian troops brought down by the 800 steamers on the Volga, and after all the Russian road to India would never be so much as menaced. We may erect a barrier against the threatened Muscovite invasion in Afghanistan, we may even be able to drive a wedge through the Russian communications through Persia, but any such plan of offensive operations as that supported by Colonel Malleson may be dismissed as wholly impossible.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE WATER-SUPPLY OF CALCUTTA.

(Indian Engineering.)

Affiliated in a large measure with the drainage scheme, but far more important in its bearing on sanitation, the subject of our article has a perennial interest, inasmuch as it is intimately connected with the abnormal mortality that threatens to be a permanent scourge to the Indian Metropolis, but in regard to which there is a consensus of opinion that it is due mainly to causes altogether preventable. Statistics too tell their mournful tale. That in Calcutta and the suburbs 24,000 inhabitants should have fallen victims within the last six years to a disease the ravages of which are subject to control seems appalling, but it is nevertheless a fact. While the Government commands resources in every department of the administration to meet extraordinary exigencies, such as famine, drought, &c., in the instance of averting a pestilence its helplessness is the more striking. So far back as 1855 Mr. William Clark submitted a scheme for drainage works; in the following year it was referred by Government to a specially selected Committee, which recorded its opinion that a diffused system of water-supply over the town was a necessary adjunct to complete drainage. Its cost was estimated at eleven and a quarter lakhs, and as the drainage system would cost thirty-two and a-half lakhs, the Committee recommended an expenditure of at least five and a-half lakhs a year, so that the combined system might be completed in ten years. It was approved by Government and the works started in 1859 in the Southern Division of the town. Up to 1870 the sources of water available for all domestic purposes in Calcutta were the rivers and the tanks and wells scattered throughout the Town. This was not only precarious but injurious to health. There were two projects placed before the Justices, one was for taking the supply from a point near Cossipore and the other that it should be drawn from the river above Barrackpore, where the water was, owing to its distance from Calcutta, comparatively uncontaminated by sewage. The matter was referred to the Government Chemist, Dr. Macnamara, who conclusively proved by analyses that the former project would confer no real benefit on the people. Since then the latter scheme has, to a certain extent, been completed, with the result that it has cost the city sixty-five lakhs of rupees, and Rs. 1,41,000 are annually expended on its maintenance and distribution; 118 miles of piping have been laid; 1,044 hydrants fixed; 15,187 houses connected and supplied; nine million of gallons are distributed daily, or eighteen and a-half gallons per inhabitant to a population at a rough estimate of 400,000. This, to say the least of it, is far below the actual requirements of the people, and is confined to those who pay for their supply. In order to bring the supply more in harmony with the requisite demand, a new forty-eight inch main, capable of carrying twelve millions of gallons, was successfully laid twelve months ago. As the programme stands, it is contemplated to supply twenty millions of gallons per day, instead of a little over eight millions as at present; of the additional twelve millions, eight will be for the Town and four for the Suburbs.

"THE LORD OF THE SILVER SPEAR."

(Correspondent of Madras Mail.)

Sweda Boh, Lord of the Silver Spear, like Alexander the coppersmith, wrought much harm. Of a fighting caste, we recognised in him a leader of men, for he led us many a wild goose chase in that sterile tract of Northern Burma which reckons Maitela for its centre. Judging from the sample of bullets he sent us from time to time, we were of opinion that he must have dabbled more or less in bi-metalism, and the fact of his having flayed his mother-in-law alive proves that he was many strides in advance of us in home rule. Kidnapping, however, was his forte, and, in his way, he was no mean disciple of those eminent Scotch authorities, Burke and Hare. I speak reservedly of Sweda Boh; he has since "come in," and the law of libel holds good all over Her Majesty's dominions. Legally, it would be quite as unjustifiable in me to publicly dissect his family circle as to foully slander the quality of a hair fluid which the inventor sent my wife last week by value payable post. When I first made the Boh's acquaintance he had come down with a barber's dozen of crosses to make an example of a Woon and his family, who, through a pronounced disloyalty to their late King's memory, proved their unaffected loyalty to us. Fortunately, through a timely interference, we upset the Boh's plans, and rescued our loyal friend when almost in extremis. In the fray we slashed up two or three coolies, who were duly heliographed in as bastard branches of the great Alompra family. I defy anyone to say they weren't, for what with their ghastly scars and lethal wounds they were beyond identification. It is curious to reflect how the calamity of these unfortunates was flashed thousands of miles over the wires, and how the newsboys were shouting out in the murky London streets, "Bloody end to the great Alompra Family," "Conspicuous gallantry of the British soldier," while the compositors, in the glare of the electric light, were setting up the type for a warning leader on an effete and immoral dynasty.

Our friend Sweda got off almost scot free, but we decided to follow him up, as his elephant was reported by the villagers to be suffering from sore feet, and, in their opinion, was not in a state to travel far. I shall have more to say about that animal presently; he was always held up as a bait to lure us on; his poor feet were reported over and over again to be dropping off; but our calculations as to his unfitness to hold out another march were always being upset, and eventually, the pachyderm sailed away far beyond our reach, a fact which plainly shows that the dry rot in an elephant's extremities does not sensibly affect his powers of locomotion. Following up the track of our four-footed invalid, we arrived without mishap at a friendly village before nightfall, and rejoiced much to hear that Sweda Boh had been joined by another gang of evil doers, and that their united forces, numbering some fifteen hundred men, were waiting to give us battle at a pagoda four or five miles ahead. We laid our plans so as to arrive before the hostile village at daybreak, and marched off our men accordingly. A sly-looking Burman, bristling with arms, and encased in a greasy wadded coat, offered to lead the cavalry to where the enemy would attempt to bolt. He was mounted on a smart pony, so we accepted his guidance. He was suspiciously familiar with the tactics of our foes, and, from subsequent events, I am inclined to think he was an inspired article, palmed off on us by the redoubtable Sweda. The ground was perfect for a free fight until we approached to within almost striking distance of the town; there Nature stepped in and favoured the sons of the soil. Every rock, crag, and gully formed a rifle pit, or shelter trench; geological freaks, and the action of water on the slopes of the pagoda-topped hill played the part of parallel lines of defence; boulders were Nature's bastions, and stunted shrubs her abris. Well, too, did the "Silver Spear" conceal his men, for although, with the aid of our glasses, we could descry the enemy moving about in the pagoda, yet to the naked eye the broken ground on both sides was apparently deserted; so much so, that our troopers blithely followed their guide—that animated ball of greasy padding. Their temerity was rewarded by a baptism of fire, not only from the jingals on the pagoda, but from the rocks and bushes almost under their feet.

What I have now to record deserves more than a passing notice in Burman history. When our Infantry, by successive rushes, had reached the pagoda a Burman scout, while retreating before them, had his leg almost severed from his body by a Snider bullet. In the full glare of our rifles a companion bounded over the parapet, snatched up his wounded comrade, but alas! before the cheer our soldiers gave him had died away he fell riddled with balls. Who after that could not wring little John Burman by the hand, and recognise in him a brother? No Victoria Cross or Order of Merit! No star of India to shine on his breast, or gracious Royal message to temper the cold dews of death. I walked up to the corpse, it lay close to the wall, one arm still wound round his comrade. The yearning look of death was softened by a faint smile. Where was this poor faithful soul? Wasting in the regions of absorption, or gliding swiftly through the silent portals of Nivana? Stand back you men with ribald jest; like Joe Siegf, the Transatlantic fireman, this poor Burman, too, has his niche in the Temple of Fame.

"Honour to him and no stint of praise
From the best of hearts in these modern days."

Having cleared the enemy's forward position we marched along a ridge of high ground towards the village, pouring in volleys every now and again to keep the ball a-rolling. How the villagers liked it in their fragile houses is a matter of conjecture. The Phoongies, too, must have had a hot time of it in their youngones, for, in the heat of an action, these yellow-robed monks, instead of lying flat on their faces, have a foolish trick of flying from one building to another. Now, to the British soldier the crouching form of a scudding monk is not unlike the yellow painted contrivance known on our Rifle Ranges as the 'running tiger,' and where friends and foes are so mixed up he is likely to meet with the same reception. In this dacoit warfare, officers must of necessity keep a very close watch on their men in order to check any mistakes of this kind. The Woon of the village came out to meet us with the news that Sweda Boh had tumbled into a ravine, and had been carried away, goodness knows where! The rest of the dacoits had dispersed in the jungle. He, moreover, informed us that the elephant's feet were uncommonly bad, one, indeed, was merely hanging on by a bit of flesh, and we ought to follow him up without delay. We were standing on very high ground, and could see miles and miles away, when a cloud of dust on the horizon attracted my attention. "Give me those glasses, boy." A miracle by Jove! the elephant is more than convalescent, he is going like smoke.

A TECHNICAL INSTITUTE FOR CEYLON.

(Ceylon Observer.)

For the local memorial in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee we should hope that at least Rs. 20,000 may be subscribed, besides the Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 3,000 that may be spent on fireworks, illuminations, and other evanescent festivities. The occasion is special and unique, the Jubilee year of the greatest and best Queen who ever sat on the British Throne. We cannot put forward more than three designs for a permanent memorial calculated to secure the support of men of all races and all religious professions—the founding of Zoological Gardens on ground near the Gregory Museum, in the Cinnamon Gardens, and the adding to the existing Museum of local productions and manufactures, an additional building of similar dimensions, calculated to hold selected specimens of the productions and manufactures of other parts of the world. In the present state of the island revenue, the carrying out of the latter produce project is hopeless. We, therefore, fall back on the scheme which from the first has seemed to us best and most feasible—the expansion of the Colombo and the Agricultural School establishment by combining with it a Technical Institute. While watches are gradually (with rapidity, recently,) spreading over the land, good watchmakers, who can set and keep time pieces going, are exceedingly scarce. Neither are good cabinet-makers glad to get work and ready to complete it in decent time over plentiful. Weaving, including carpet-making, might be taught. And there might be classes for modelling, drawing, wood engraving, and lithography. Skilful workers in gold, silver, gems, ivory, and other ornamental substances, such as spinel-limestone, garnetiferous gneiss, red granite, &c., might be advantageously multiplied, to supply not only local demand, but that of the numerous visitors brought, in increasing numbers, by steamers to our ports. Even better boat-builders, carpenters, blacksmiths, tinsmiths, shoemakers, and tailors, might be trained, wholly or partially in such an establishment, with great benefit to the country. Government have abundant land for the erection of workshops, laboratories for chemical experiments, dormitories &c., and if the people of Ceylon contributed Rs. 20,000 or Rs. 30,000 as a fund for the support of teachers, Government, we doubt not, would gladly spend an equal amount on the necessary buildings. As youths from every part of Ceylon, however remote, would be eligible as students in such an institution, the inhabitants of every class, race, and religion, might be properly asked and confidently expected to give liberally towards the founding and support of what will not only be an appropriate Memorial of the Queen's Jubilee, but a source of perennial benefit to Ceylon, where it is beginning to be realised that man cannot live by the pen alone, and that the term "mechanic" indicates some of the noblest and most useful forms of human skill and labour, instead of being as hitherto in Colombo a synonym for what is low and contemptible.

THE INDIAN FOREST SERVICE.

(Indian Agriculturist.)

It is announced that an open competition for the Forest Service in India will be held in London in June next, when not less than ten probationers will be selected. The examination will be open to all natural born subjects of Her Majesty, but they must be unmarried, and above seventeen but under twenty-one years of age, on the 1st of June, 1887. The subjects of examination form a somewhat wide curriculum of studies, in which the Latin and Greek languages give place to German and French. The service can have no attractions whatever for English youths, and as its conditions become known, it will much surprise us if any applicants whatever present themselves to the examiners. For if the candidate is successful in the competitive examination, it does not by any means follow that he will finally secure an appointment to the service. The competition is but the commencement of a series of examinations, recurring periodically, while the probationer is under what is called a course of training at Cooper's Hill College, extending over nearly two years, at an annual charge of £180, to be borne by his parents or guardians. At twenty-two or twenty-three years of age, and after an expensive education, that cannot have cost his parents less than £250 a year from the time he was fourteen years old—if the boy's character is good, his physique strong, his sight and hearing perfect, and he can ride well, he may get an appointment in India, to the magnificent position of an Assistant Conservator of Forests on Rs. 250 a month, from the date of his arrival in the country. Particular stress is laid in the rules for admission, upon the applicant's good vision and hearing. "Means are taken to test his physical powers of endurance"—we hope not by making him to qualify as a "fasting man"—and all these formidable preliminaries result in the chance of the young man securing an appointment in the forests and jungles in India, upon the extravagant pay of £170 to £180 a year (Rs. 250), with no prospects before him whatever. He must pass through no less than seven grades of service before he becomes a third grade Conservator upon about £650 a year. It is a mockery and a snare to parade such a service before English parents, who know little or nothing of the conditions of service in this country. Take the case of an English boy at fifteen years of age, whose parents or guardians are prepared to spend £2,000 upon giving him a fair start in life. Under this shameless Cooper's Hill fraud, the boy's friends are induced to spend £250 a year for seven or eight years, upon his education, to procure for him the chance of spending his life in the jungles of India, upon a salary of £180 a year rising to £700. An English boy who has been under good tuition from 9 to 15 years of age is well fitted to become an apprentice in any profession or business whatever, while if his friends have £2,000 at their command to give him "a start in life," they can place him, with the greatest ease, in circumstances in which he may secure a junior partnership in the firm that has educated him, at the very same age at which the victimised candidate for a life in the jungles is offered the magnificent salary of £170 a year. Cooper's Hill is a fraud upon both nations, while it is kept up at indefinite cost to the people of this country, who have already been made to pay well on to half-a-million sterling for its foundation. It is necessary to speak plainly upon this subject. There is no reason whatever why Government should not have a large Forest School in India itself for training Native youth for the exclusive filling of these jungle appointments. It may be, and no doubt is, desirable to have two or three highly-qualified men of European training at the head of every provincial branch of the service, but that exhausts absolutely the need for European officers. And in a very few years' time even that need will disappear, India herself producing a school of Forest officers second to none in the world. The simple truth is that in the midst of endless protestations—protestations of our desire to rule the country wisely—every branch of the public service, upon one pretence or other, is made a preserve for Englishmen. Native youth, excluding the Eurasian community, are practically included because their friends cannot possibly face the costly regulations which require them to pass these ordeals in England. What person of common sense fails to see that, however real may have been the necessity for European guidance in the establishment of the Forest Service, that need has now gone, and that it is in India itself that we should now recruit the service without a thought of resorting to England for the purpose. The service has ceased to offer a career to English youth, and it is only to impose upon the mother-country to keep up the pretence of such a career for its sons. The schools of this city alone—such schools as the City College, the Doveton, St. Xavier's, the Missionary Schools, and others—are turning out every year boys in large numbers for whom all appointments in the Forest, Opium, Police, Land Settlement, Post Office, Telegraph, Railway, and Account Departments should be reserved. England will still have not only her own home service and colonies, but the highest appointments in India as a legitimate career for her sons, while to train them highly, and at the expense of India, for competition in the services that we have named is a wrong both to the mother-country and to its great dependency. The only satisfaction we have in reviewing matters is the inclination of the Government to accept these views, but unless the Press drive the conviction home the Government will move only with the proverbial slowness that characterises its actions in all reforms.

THE NATIVE CULTIVATOR.

A PLEA FOR CASTE.

(Englishman.)

Observers of the habits of the people of this country cannot but admire the rules made by their patriarchs for their welfare, which non-observers designate as superstitions and caste prejudices. The duty of instructing the masses belongs to the Brahmins, and, as they receive payment for their services in kind, their interest is the same as that of those whom they teach. The practical results of their labours can be seen in everyday life, for the Hindus turn out the best cultivators, artisans, and scholars in India. The laws which regulate the lives of the Indus at first sight appear ridiculous, and of such a binding nature as to leave no hope of advancement. This is not so, for sufficient freedom is allowed in cases of emergency. For instance, a Brahmin can quench his thirst with water from a raw cowhide water-bag filled by a Musulman without losing caste, by the simple expedient of scraping a hole in the ground for the reception of the liquid, the idea being that by contact with mother earth the water becomes purified. This explains how it is that all the castes can take water from the same well. The silkworm rearer must not bathe or wear clean clothes during the time he is attending on the worms, but he can wade through running water. He must not talk about the diseases of the worms, speak about cocoons, or even set eyes on one, but he may converse as much as he likes on the silkworm, fly ants, and other parasites, and plot and work out engines of destruction for the same. The rule which prevents the rearer from being allowed to see a cocoon is one of the wisest which could possibly have been instituted among a dilatory people. It forces him to dispose of every cocoon before the new batch of worms hatch out. The natural consequence is that he has to thoroughly cleanse his house and rearing rooms, so that there shall be no chance of his seeing any cocoon, the result of previous rearing, and in this manner all the larvæ of flies and other parasites are effectually disposed of.

On the same lines instruction is given to the agricultural classes, and he would be a daring individual who would at the present moment guarantee a lasting benefit to India by the use of deep ploughing, threshing machines, chemical manures, teaching cattle to eat wheat straw whole instead of bhosa, or by allowing fruit to ripen naturally. The Indian cultivator has some method in his madness in insisting on the straw being flattened out, for herein lies the whole secret of keeping down insects destructive to crops, when science can give no practical relief. The action necessary to flatten out the straw causes the sound grains of wheat to be thoroughly cleansed of all ova and impurities. All hollow, soft, and unsound grains are pulverised by the action of the bullocks' feet, and the unsound grain is winnowed out with the pieces of flattened straw.

The simple and general manure in use is ash, the product of all farm refuse and old roots and stems of crops. This manure benefits only one crop, but the manufacturing of it destroys the larvæ of all pests lurking within the refuse. Deep ploughing must also add to the risk of harbouring insects injurious to crops, by enabling the larvæ to penetrate deeper into the soil and thus escape the dry heat of May and June, which is injurious to all insects in the chrysalis or pupa state.

The habit of plucking fruit green and allowing it to ripen in straw in a dry place does good to the whole community, for by this means the larvæ are removed along with the fruit and placed in condition most adverse to their development into perfect insects. The scientific farmers of England and America look to quick returns on capital, and if the individual would be considerate enough not to live too long, his books would show handsome profits by the use of deep ploughing, threshing machines, and artificial manures, but at the expense of those who come after.

DISARMAMENT OF THE BURMESE.

(Pioneer.)

In considering the probable duration of the guerilla fighting in Upper Burma, one important factor must not be overlooked, and this is the supply of firearms and ammunition among the malcontent sections of the population. Theebaw did all in his power to get arms, and each village could boast of a number of smooth-bores, ancient it may be but still effective at close quarters in the jungle. The whole of the cannon fell into our hands as General Prendergast passed up the Irrawaddy and occupied the Palace at Mandalay, the real Arsenal of Burma, so we had not to count upon hostile "batteries" in the desultory warfare that was afterwards entered upon. At Minhla, Ava, and in Mandalay, too, some 2,000 rifles and muskets were surrendered; but this was but a small number after all. Since that time about 3,000 firearms of various kinds have been taken or given up, so that 5,000 stand-of-arms may be said to have been secured. The question is, how many more remain in the hands of dacoits and villagers, and how can they best be taken possession of? We have heard the number estimated at from 20,000 to 40,000, including matchlocks and poor weapons of the kind; and it seems highly probable that the lower number is within the mark, for the Wuntho Tsawbwa alone is said to have 1,000 muskets. Even in the pacified districts arms are known to be hidden away, the people being loth to part with them, accustomed as they have been to use them for years. Of gunpowder there does not seem to be much lack; though it is poor stuff it is made readily enough in certain districts, and our aim all along has been to seize such villages as were noted for its manufacture. Lead bullets are not so plentiful, but the dacoits use iron slugs freely, and until lately, had a partiality for cutting the telegraph wire to supplement their failing supply of bullets. As to percussion caps a million occupy a comparatively small compass, and these are known to have been smuggled across our old frontier for years before the annexation; the dacoits will probably run out of gunpowder before their caps are exhausted, for they do not after all fire many rounds in their peculiar mode of fighting. For the past four months they have been so hard pressed and have suffered such losses both in men and guns that they cannot fail to be discouraged; but when the climate favours they will no doubt raise their heads again and seek to replenish their store of arms and ammunition by attacks upon villages at some distance from our posts. Can we meanwhile afford to let the dacoits have opportunities of replenishing their stock of arms? It would almost seem wiser to disarm everyone absolutely, giving such protection as the presence of over 30,000 soldiers and police can afford. It may seem a harsh measure at first sight, but it is one which has commended itself to the military authorities, and is, we believe, now under consideration. As the dacoits find they cannot get arms and supplies of powder and shot they will come to see that a continuation of their operations is hopeless, and it is to be hoped that they will return to their homes as so many have done in the Schwebo district and elsewhere. This question of disarmament is really of the first importance; until nine-tenths of the firearms in Upper Burma have been collected and destroyed, there can be no certainty of the country being permanently pacified.

THE EXTENSION OF THE QUETTA RAILWAY.

(Pioneer.)

The special survey party of which Mr. O'Callaghan is to have charge will, we fear, have great difficulty in aligning the extension of the Quetta Railway over the Khwaja-Amran Range, the great natural barrier which divides the Peshin Valley from the eastern portions of the Kandahar province. Quetta itself is 5,600 feet above the sea; Gulistan on the eastern slope of the Khwaja-Amran, to which the railway now reaches, is about 5,000 feet, but thereafter the rise is very considerable; the Khojak Pass which leads direct to Chaman, an outpost on the Kandahar side, being 7,200 feet. The military road passes over the Khojak Kotal, the sudden rise of 2,000 and the fall of 1,700 on the western side (Chaman being 5,500 feet), being negotiated by cleverly engineered zig-zags. But a mountain railway with its gradients and curves cannot be made like a mountain road, and to carry the line directly over the Khojak would involve serious risks. Various plans have been proposed, including a tunnel through the range at about 1,000 feet below its crest near the Khojak; the alignment of the railway to the south so as to cross the hills by the Gwaja Pass, which is lower than the Khojak; and the passage of the range some distance to the north of the present Khojak road. The route mentioned last is said to offer many advantages, but until Mr. O'Callaghan has made a thorough examination of the range no definite conclusions can be arrived at. Of the necessity for extending the railway to our outpost at Chaman, whence to Kandahar there is open country presenting no engineering difficulties, there can be no question. Whatever the future may have in store for us, we are bound to make the south-west angle of the defences of India strong for offence as well as defence, for no defensive position can be considered good and sufficient that does not permit of counter-attacks being made. The extension of the railway from Sibi to Quetta and thence onwards to the western slope of the Khwaja-Amran has increased our strength on the south-east frontier of Afghanistan a hundredfold, for it has solved the most difficult of all questions which have to be considered in Asiatic warfare,—that of transport. We can now concentrate an army corps at short notice in Peshin by railway, and the thousands of baggage animals which but two years ago were required on the trying route from Rindli to Quetta and the Khojak would now be available for work beyond the frontier. But the Khojak itself is a trying pass for heavily-laden camels and mules; were the railway terminus at Chaman instead of at the eastern entrance of the pass, the march onwards to Kandahar and the Helmand—which may some day have to be undertaken, however unwilling we may be to move further westwards—would be indeed simplified. Moreover, it is only 90 miles from Chaman to Kandahar, and the country, as we have already said, presents no engineering difficulties; if Chaman had been reached by railway, the line could be extended to Kandahar in a few weeks, and our position there be enormously strengthened thereby. This eventuality is being provided for by the storing in Peshin of rails and material necessary for the construction of 100 miles of line. If the Amir, as was suggested in these columns by a correspondent some three years ago, could be induced to make the earthwork for the railway between Kandahar and Chaman, the position would be further simplified, but Abdur Rahman unfortunately does not seem inclined to take the initiative in this, and the matter cannot be pressed upon him. The most important point to secure in the meantime is the extension of the railway over or through the Khwaja-Amran, and we hope Mr. O'Callaghan will during the next few months discover a practicable alignment, so that work may be begun upon this section next autumn. By that time the Hurnai Railway will be in full working order, and there will not be the least difficulty in securing abundant labour.

COMPRESSED FODDER.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

An invention has lately been patented by Mr. A. Rogers C.E., of the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway, which bids fair to dispose of the long-vexed question of the transport of fodder in times of war, and to altogether revolutionize, in fact, the Commissariat system, which is so apt to break down in any severe pressure. It is hardly necessary to remark on the enormous waste, both of material and in cost of carriage, which at present attends the placing of any given amount of forage or fodder at any distance from the place of production. The bulky nature of bhusa makes it impossible to carry any large quantities in the ordinary railway waggons without a most extravagant use of space. A railway truck of ten tons' capacity can only hold eighty maunds of bhusa, even when tightly packed in twenty seer bags. There is, moreover, the enormous loss in loading, unloading, and stacking from wind and waste, as well as the risk of fire from the sparks from the engine, which is calculated to have amounted to some 20 lakhs of rupees on this account alone during the last Afghan war. Mr. Rogers proposes to utilise the hydraulic cotton presser, of which there are fifty-four already in India, situated at all the great centres of supply. By the application of the method which he has patented, he has overcome the difficulties hitherto found to stand in the way of successfully compressing fodder owing to the want of cohesion in the particles of bhusa. The stuff is compressed into bales of known weight, adapted to the capabilities of the various animals used in transport; and is turned out in such a form that it can be loaded in the ordinary railway trucks as easily as cotton. At the recent Saharanpore Fair samples of the compressed fodder were submitted to the consideration of a special committee, composed of the officers of the Remount Department, and the peripatetic Remounts Committee, Mr. Smeaton, the Director of Agriculture and Commerce, North-West Provinces and Oudh, and the district officials. The samples were put to every test that could be applied, and came successfully through the searching ordeal. It was found to be practically almost impervious to water and fire. When the bales were opened, as they could be with the greatest ease, the compressed fodder (made up in proportions given by the Remount Department in their tables) was easily disintegrated, and was readily consumed by the several animals for whom it was intended. There is no reason to suppose that fodder thus compressed could not be kept for years, so that an enormous saving would be effected by quietly collecting and preparing large quantities of fodder in peace time; when it would not only be cheap, but when that good quality could be secured which is unattainable in the hurry-scurry of war operations.

LALLA ROOKH IN PRISON.

(Bombay Gazette.)

AGED HINDOO REFORMER:—

"Six months in a vile prison! Is this, then, Your ancient chivalry, Oh, Godlike men! Ye say a law stands thus ye did not make, That, till repealed, this law ye dare not break; Oh, haste then to repeal it, cleanse the stain, And let the page of law shine pure again! Six months a captive! Say, is this the law? Yea, Shylock's, which sate the gluttonous maw Of the foul bond, with deep, demoniac art Exacts its pound of flesh:—a human heart! Six months in prison, else a shrinking girl Into a stranger's arms ye, ruthless, hurl! Ye say 'tis law; the Shastras say 'tis not. The laws of Manu ne'er showed such a blot, Ne'er taught that children, though in youth betrothed, Without consenting, yea, e'en when they loathed All thought of leaving home—being infants still, Or children playing at their mother's knee— Were really married! and against their will Should from their mother's arms be torn and be The slave of one they scarce have known or seen, Whom their soul loathes mayhap! This ne'er hath been The teaching the first sacred books provide, No more than widow-burning or infanticide!"

YOUTHFUL REFORMER:—

"These doctrines were corruptions coined in turn! And may all those who coined them lingering burn. Far from the light, where deadly vapours lurk In awful caverns of the central Nark,* Nor issuing thence be ever born again, Or if so, ne'er to higher life attain Than loathsome crawling reptiles, slimy slow, For whom bright Indra' heaven shall never glow, Whom even the gliding Nagas shall despise And spurn with scorn from Swarga—paradise! May they from birth to birth in scale descend To things where life itself doth seem to end, Nor pardoned be till they, for ages groan Alive, but ever helpless and alone, Conscious in moveless misery!—a stone!"†

AGED REFORMER:—

"Oh, pause, nor think another's woe can mend The sufferings of those we seek to fend, But England! shall we vainly on you cry? We but reclaim the first laws pure and high Which our great Aryan fathers gave of yore. We helped you to abolish Suttie and the gore Of infant, human sacrifice.‡ Oh, thou, Great England, hear, nor shrink to help us now! Enlightened Brahman culture speaks through us; Enforce not infant contracts; rule but thus, Young maids and widows slaves no more we'll see; Marriage without consent a sacrilege must be! England, still show that justice shall be heard! We've battled long in thoughts, by deed and word; Ours was the strife, with you the task remains To burst poor weak and helpless woman's chains; 'Twas ours to urge, to you the glory be To make our infants and our widows free!"

ADULTERATION OF INDIAN WHEAT.

(Pioneer.)

Frequent reference has been made in these columns to the adulteration of Indian wheat, and we have always laid the chief blame on the system of refraction maintained by the exporters. There have been several attempts of late to shift the blame on to the shoulders of the growers, it being said that the latter refuse to supply clean wheat. We may, therefore, adduce some fresh evidence on the point. "C.B.," writing in a Bombay paper, says the wheat known as white pessi, and grown in the Nerbudda Valley and Chattisgarh, the finest wheat districts in India, comes to market pure to the extent of 96 per cent. Were it shipped on this condition it would take a foremost place at home; but it is not. The European export houses in Bombay contract with Native dealers for wheat containing a certain percentage of dirt and a certain percentage of inferior qualities; the Native dealers pass the contract to their up-country agents, and as a result the wheat that reaches the Bombay Docks is pure only to the extent of 80 per cent., with 16 per cent. of inferior qualities, and 4 per cent. of pure mud. Here, then, on the evidence of one who "has had several years' up-country experience in the wheat trade," we find that the best wheat in India is still sent pure from the fields, and that it is only when it comes into the hands of the agents of export houses that it receives the admixture of dirt and inferior grain. Of course it will not be long before the growers begin wilful adulteration, and then we shall have the same confirmed system of sophistication, profiting no one, discrediting the Indian wheat, and declared by growers, dealers, and Chambers of Commerce to be ineradicable, which at present discredits the trade of Northern India.

INDIAN TEA.

(Englishman.)

The yearly increasing out-turn of Indian tea gardens, and the growing pressure of new competitors, such as Ceylon, render it so extremely desirable to extend the demand for tea, that it is satisfactory to learn that a promising proposal with that object is under the consideration of the Indian Tea Association. A South Sylhet planter of many years' experience in this country and some knowledge of the trade at home has submitted a scheme to the Association for promoting the sale of Indian teas in America and Canada, and the Association has referred the matter to the London Secretary for his opinion, which we trust, may be in its favour, as the scheme is deserving of every assistance. The promoter desires to stimulate the retail sale of Indian tea in the United States and Canada by enabling consumers to buy direct from the producers, and so avoid the possibility of being deceived into buying a mixture of China tea as Indian manufacture. He undertakes to ship tea direct from Calcutta at his own risk and cost, and asks by way of financial support a subsidy from the Association for advertising purposes equal to half an anna per acre under tea. This sum would equal a contribution of Rs. 16 for a garden of 500 acres. The Association would have neither risk nor trouble; the advertisements, at a small cost to the industry, would keep Indian teas before public notice; and the consumer could rely upon getting the genuine article, and not a hybrid compound of unknown elements. The scheme is a decided move in the right direction, promising to open what is practically a new market for the retail sale of Indian teas, and the opportunity should not be missed by those whose interests are concerned. Should it be carried out and prove a success, then many others will no doubt be found ready and willing to follow in the footsteps of the promoter, and to join in the trade without asking for any help whatever from the Association.

OUR EDUCATION OF NATIVES.

(Indian Planters' Gazette.)

Some six years ago the market value of a graduate of the Calcutta University was Rs. 20 a month, and to day their market value is naturally less than the figures above quoted. It is not alone in Bengal, however, that this educating of men out of their natural sphere of life and duty is going on. The colleges of missionaries and the Government are throwing on the market crowds of useless men, puffed up with an undue sense of their own importance—men who know nothing except what they have learned from their college text-books—men who never read, and who never will read anything but their text-books, and who will never touch a book after leaving the college classes, unless it be books of a special character. The bulk of the educated Native youths are useless hangers-on to the skirts of circumstances, discontented, disappointed and idle, a very hot-bed in which are reared every wild conception and demand that finds utterance in the Native Press. This is one of the natural results of over-education, not only in India, but in every country in the world. The Government are evidently alive to the dangers which are gathering; but instead of putting an end to this wholesale production of a dangerous class, it has used its best influence to increase their number and intensify the evil by advocating the establishment of technical schools. Government should withdraw entirely from the whole higher class education of India, and beyond retaining a controlling influence in the disposal of grants, scholarships, &c., leave the whole matter to private enterprise. Government should concentrate its forces on the primary education of the masses, and leave the manufacturing of the present race of university students—withered creatures of discontent—to those who choose to manufacture them at ordinary market rates, and on purely commercial principles. The sooner this source of mischief to India is dried up the better. Enthusiasts may rave as they will regarding the grand artistic possibilities and actualities of India, but as long as a decent blacksmith or carpenter cannot be had the less said about all this the better. In the capital of India a Chinese craftsman will any day command double the wages of a Native tradesman. The country wants cheap skilled labour, not scatterbrained youths puffed up with an inordinate sense of their own importance. The way, however, to obtain skilled and cheap labour is not, as we have said, through technical school

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE BALKAN PENINSULA.*

The "Eastern Question" presents so many phases that as month after month passes by each and every one of those periods of time brings a fresh book, yet, withal, there still remains something fresh to be told—something new to be considered. M. Emile de Laveleye's valuable work, now rendered accessible to the British public in the form of Mrs. Thorpe's very excellent translation, deals principally with the ethnography of the Balkan Peninsula. It draws aside the veil from the inner life of the people, showing at the time their aims, their aspirations, their strength, and their weakness; and in this glimpse of their national existence there is given a full account of the religious communities of the peoples, the Greek Church, with its "Icons" its gorgeous ceremonies, its superb vestments; the Musulman, with his pious ablutions, his remarkable piety, his stern submission to the will of "Allah"; the Jew, with his incessant, never-failing desire to amass wealth and acquire riches; the Roman Catholic, with his dogma, his adoration of the saints, and his submission to the Pope—these each and all appear before the reader in rapid turn. The kaleidoscope of information is constantly changing. "Here, there, and everywhere," is the motto of a question which for centuries has baffled the wisest brains; and who is the man, and when the time, that is to set at rest a problem which has breathed a spirit of unrest into the whole uncivilised world?

The difficulties which M. de Laveleye brings to light are most assuredly well-nigh impossible of solution. First there are the national aspirations, which can apparently never be assimilated into one homogeneous mass. If there is, for instance, to be a huge federation for the whole of the Balkan Peninsula, what is to be its religion, what its language, what its fiscal system, what its church, what its political sympathies? Is it to lean towards Russia, with her trickery, cunning, and deceit?—towards Austria, with her dual Government and her autocratic traditions? Are the patrician and the plebeian to rest happy and content under the ægis of the House of Hapsburg? Or, again, is England, with her honesty, her political folly, her unsteadiness of purpose, to win the hearts of the new principality? These are questions which may well despair of an answer. And if to these be added the mutual jealousies of races antagonistic in their ideas and anti-pathetic in their feelings—races with memories of former struggles, when the land flowed with the blood of the sons fallen in the defence of their hearths and homes—races, some economical in their habits and thrifty in their ways, others ready and prone to dissipate in gaiety and frivolity the income of the present and the patrimony of the past—how it may, it must be inquired, are all these irreconcilable incongruities to be brushed aside, and the lion and lamb made to lie peaceably side by side in the midst of a happy political millennium?

If, too, any zealous enthusiast should fancy there might be a way of achieving what has not been achieved in centuries of toil and endless years of thought, a perusal of M. de Laveleye's introductory chapter on the political aspect of the Eastern Question will dissipate any sanguine notions. One point, and it is but one of many, will serve to show the hopelessness of the problem—if the "sick man" dies, who is to occupy Constantinople?

These remarks are not penned in any disparagement of the clearness and perspicacity of M. de Laveleye's narrative, which leaves nothing to be desired. There is a vast array of information, statistical, historical, and personal; and the book merits careful perusal, albeit the author would wish it believed that the one man in this country to whom the public should look for guidance in this difficulty is the apostle of the Parnellites, the right hon. member for Midlothian!

CIVILIZATION OF THE EASTERN IRANIANS IN ANCIENT TIMES.*

It seems strange that the founder of a religion which exists to this day should be enveloped in such complete obscurity as meets the inquirer at every turn when he seeks to unravel the mysteries attendant upon the career of Zoroaster. When did he live? Not only do critics disagree, but they differ to the extraordinary extent of 5,000 years!—some persons supposing that he flourished about 1,000 years B.C., while others go back as far as 6,000 years B.C. Dr. W. Geiger inclines to the view that there might have been two persons bearing the same name, whence the confusion and uncertainty which research has been powerless to remove. Nor is it more clear when he was born. Indeed, after an exhaustive inquiry the German professor is fain to admit that the problem is insoluble. When, too, we come to the life of Zoroaster legend takes the part of fact. His ancestry is problematical, his birth miraculous, his early life a series of wonders, his mission marvellous. There is not a solitary atom of terra firma whereon common sense can rest the foot of confidence; all is vague, undefined, misty, obscure, and inconceivable. His death, too, baffles all pursuit after sober fact. Some say he was snatched up into Heaven without passing the portals of annihilation; others affirm that while undoubtedly Zoroaster was permitted to have a foretaste of Paradise he came back to earth to teach and instruct mankind. Amidst such a chaos of doubt, perplexity, and inconsistency, it will not occasion surprise that some scholars have been tempted to treat all these tales as mythical, the inventions of fervid imagination and fickle fancy. Dr. Geiger dismisses this assumption as opposed to internal evidence, "which necessarily shows that a single individual at least put his finishing hand to the religion, whatever may have been his name."

The inquiring student will find in this volume ample to repay the trouble of perusal, not only with reference to Zoroaster, but also as concerns the "Avesta," which latter as regards its "home and age" has always been the standing difficulty of Iranian philology. On the one hand, the doctrines and ideas contained therein are too noble and elevated to have been developed amidst people still in the infancy of civilization; whereas, on the other hand, there is overwhelming evidence that its appearance must have dated from a very remote antiquity, when coined money, salt, glass, and iron were unknown to mankind, and when pastoral pursuits and rural occupations were indicative of simplicity of life and primitive plainness of existence. These intricate questions and numerous other problems of social life amongst the ancient Iranian communities are discussed at length in the volume under review. It does not pretend to be attractive so much as valuable, or interesting so much as profound; but it is sure to find readers amongst the thoughtful, and Darab Dastur Peshotan Sanjana deserves the thanks of the learned world for translating a work which throws considerable light upon the establishment of the Parsi religion to which he belongs, and clears away some difficulties in regard to a faith, which, apart from its inherent virtues, can at least boast the merit of high antiquity.

MAHARAJA NANDA KUMAR.†

Mr. Beveridge has published over 400 pages of print to prove that Sir J. Stephen's "Story of Nuncomar and the Impeachment of Sir Elijah Impey" bristles with errors—alike of fact as of inference. To follow the various arguments and to discuss in detail the mighty array of "pros and cons" is obviously out of the question. It would need another volume to settle the dispute thus hotly waged. It must suffice to glance somewhat cursorily at a work which is "unco" heavy reading. The weak point in Mr. Beveridge's armour seems to us to be that the acceptance of his views involves a monstrous degree of condemnation upon others. Take, for instance, Sir J. Stephen. It must be credited that "he looks at great questions from the point of view of the mere practising lawyer, and in consequence he cannot grasp them." After such a sweeping charge it is refreshing to read that the Judge "has a great deal of rather commonplace ability." Well, really, Sir James ought to be thankful for small mercies, albeit "such moral weapons will avail little in a contest with the gods"! Mr. Beveridge's modesty precluded the inclusion of his own name in the category of celestial beings. May we be permitted to remedy the omission?

Hastings was an unscrupulous trickster—mean, dishonest, contemptible, immoral, wary, and shifty, but blessed with marvellous luck. Yet, withal, some benighted, simple-minded students of history hold to the opinion that if there had never been a Warren Hastings to found an empire in India there never could have been a Beveridge to decry his administration of a portion of the kingdom which the genius of England's great Pro-Consul reared up on the ruins of conquered countries and subdued dynasties. How great the loss would have been to mankind at large can well be estimated: then 400 pages of concentrated wisdom and learning would have never seen the light of day.

Hyde was "poor, narrow-minded, and perhaps half-damaged"—the jury was "prejudiced and incompetent." The witnesses for the prosecution were all friends and dependents of Warren Hastings, and therefore, it may be presumed, though it is not so stated, ready and fit for any villainy, chicanery, and rascality which their unscrupulous patron might wish them to display. One man, and one man alone, comes in for praise. The great essayist is lauded to the skies for his "intuition" in guessing and imputing motives when there was no proof of guilt or evidence of crime; but then—and this is the all-important consideration—the views of Macaulay were in harmony with those propounded by Mr. Beveridge. Can genius go beyond this?

It is somewhat disappointing after toiling through 400 pages of print to find that the great arbiter is convinced that "the question of whether Nanda Kumar really forged the bond or not is one which can probably never be satisfactorily answered." Why then—and the inquiry is surely pertinent—inflict mankind with a huge volume to prove that Sir J. Stephen should wear a hat and bells while the brow of Mr. Beveridge should be decked with a garland of bays? But we had forgotten that "agnostics" are not to be guaged by the standard applicable to ordinary intellects and commonplace mediocrities.

TAKING YOUR CHAIRS WHEN DINING OUT.—It is seldom we hear of a guest taking his chair with him when dining out. One would think that such a thing was impossible in these days of conveniences. This theory was dispersed on March 18, by the evidence of young Everett in the case of Everett v. Ensor, a suit in the Ootacamund courts for damages for loss of furniture in a house tenanted by the defendant, Lieut. Ensor, at Wellington. Young Everett, in the course of his evidence, stated that poor furnishing in houses was rather the rule than the exception in Wellington, and that on one occasion when Lieut. and Mrs. Dewhurst invited Lieut. and Mrs. Ensor to dinner, the latter had to go to their host's house with a servant following, carrying two chairs, as the furniture of the house would not permit of seating invited persons. Colonel Hill, who took the evidence on commission, at this juncture looked the lad earnestly in the face, and seeing that he was truthful, laughed heartily. His Honour said the incident brought back to his memory his youthful days when he was a blushing ensign. In those days it was always understood that when you received an invitation to dinner, you always took your "boy" with you, and your chair. A violation of this recognised rule often meant that the violator had to sit on a box or stand at table. His Honour, however, did not think that he would have heard of a repetition of this practice in this part of the century. The residents of Wellington should issue special invitation cards with "please bring your chair with you," added at the bottom, in conspicuous print.—Bangalore Spectator.

OPENING OF THE RAWUL PINDI WATERWORKS.—The Rawul Pindi correspondent of the Civil and Military Gazette telegraphs on the 26th ult.:—The Rawul Pindi waterworks were opened by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at five o'clock this afternoon, in public Durbar. Colonel Nisbet, the Commissioner, General Dillon, commanding the division, and a very large muster of the ladies and gentlemen of the station, were present. There was also a large assemblage of Native gentlemen, and the Durbar tents, filled throughout, presented a most brilliant spectacle. The proceedings opened with the usual Durbar ceremonies, after which the Municipal committee were presented, and read an address which was enclosed in a chased silver case. Thereafter, Mr. Gardiner, the Deputy Commissioner, read a paper giving a history of the waterworks scheme. The Lieutenant-Governor then addressed the assemblage. He regretted, he said, that his place was not occupied by the Duke of Connaught, as was at first intended, the waterworks being named after his Highness's illustrious mother. He thanked and complimented Colonel Nisbet and Messrs. Hebbert, Fenner and Johnstone, the engineers, and all connected with this scheme, on its completion. He paid a very high tribute of praise to Colonel Nisbet's administrative energy and ability, referring to the permanent monuments which he had left behind him at Lahore, Simla, Delhi, and that now completed here. He referred to his own approaching departure from the province, but assured his audience that he would never forget the Punjab or its people, wherever his lot might be cast; and he, by God's help, would never fail to promote their interests if in his power. He then turned a lever, and declared the waterworks open, departing under the usual salute. The roads were gaily decorated with flags and arches, and the whole population of the city lined them throughout, the greatest enthusiasm being shown by all classes. Lady Aitchison has arrived here from Hoti Mardan, where she has laid the foundation stone of the Guides' Memorial Church.

SIR RIVERS THOMPSON AND HIS CRITICS.

WHATEVER truth there may be in the poet's saying that "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," there can be no doubt of the troubles which encompass the brow of him who wears a somewhat lesser dignity, but hardly a less responsible one, as the Ruler of a great Indian Province. Sir Rivers Thompson, who has just laid down that office, would no doubt bear ready testimony to this truth. He has had the experience of governing a population of sixty-seven millions, extending over an area of 150,000 square miles, and he retires after an experience of Native character of nearly thirty-six years spent in arduous and honourable service in India. That experience has been gained chiefly in Bengal, the Lieutenant-Governorship of which is one of the highest prizes and most coveted posts in the Indian Civil Service. During his tenure of office Sir Rivers Thompson has learnt much of the advantages which the system of education under British auspices has ensued in order to establish loyalty and good understanding between the ruler and the ruled. Bengal has in this respect been the most favoured of all the provinces of India, and what has been the result? A continual attack on, and misrepresentation of, the policy of Government in the vernacular Press, to which we have given the widest license. In the April number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review, Sir Lepel Griffin, in his paper on "The Public Service of India," which we have already noticed, wrote:—

Sir Rivers Thompson, the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, will have vacated his post and returned to England before this article appears in India. I may therefore without impropriety refer to him as one of the most upright, equitable, modest and kindly officials who have ever directed the fortunes of Bengal. Yet Sir Rivers chanced to take the opposite from the popular view with regard to the ill-conceived and misshapen bantling that is passing down to posterity under the name of the Ilbert Bill. The consequence has been that he has been persistently attacked in the most savage and mendacious manner. Not only his policy, but his character and private life, have been the subject of the most venomous abuse. This is the fate of every Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. I have seen a long series, extending from Sir John Peter Grant, and I do not know one who has not been the subject of the most persistent and libellous attack.

Sir Rivers Thompson, so far as his own countrymen and the Mahomedans of Bengal are concerned, has laid down the reins of office after gaining their confidence and esteem, and he carries with him into his retirement their best wishes and warmest sympathies. It is the Bengali Babú—that educational monstrosity which our own folly has shaped—who continues to throw mud at the departing Governor. "He has," says one of the organs of this class, "no sympathies with the people. Whether in connection with the Ilbert Bill or with the Local Self-Government Scheme, or with the Calcutta Municipal Corporation or with the Native Press, he showed a positive antipathy to the people of the country." Another journal says, "Sir Rivers Thompson could not dissociate British power from the idea of brute force, and it naturally happened that never, except in the times of the mutiny, was race hatred at such a height as during the five years of his rule over us." We have quoted from only the mildest of his Native critics, but there could scarcely be brought against a Governor of an Indian Province a more serious charge than that he stirred up race antagonism and alienated the affections of the people from their rulers. Yet this wicked, lying accusation is what Sir Rivers has had to put up with. Against such may be put his own noble words in his reply to the farewell address presented to him by the community of Calcutta:—

In the presence of people divided among themselves by every form of creed and religion and yet all of whom are in enjoyment of equal rights, the power of England is a bulwark against all the forces of commotion and anarchy; but none the less, as the sons whom England has sent forth to assert the pre-eminence of her laws and liberties and literature, there will always be, I trust, between the people of this country and Englishmen, that mutual forbearance and friendship and generosity of sentiment on the growth and permanence of which alone the highest welfare of India depends.

But it is this very reference to British power which always stirs up the ire of the Bengali Babú. He declares that Sir Rivers Thompson "belongs to the old class of rulers to which brute force, power, supremacy, and general good are all synonymous terms. Bengal is struggling for a higher ideal." What that ideal is all Englishmen who have any experience of the Babú know. Sycophant and self-seeking as he is, he has no more sympathy with the poor and suffering of his fellow-countrymen than he has with the tortured and goaded bullocks that he meets in his daily walks. But he revels in the license, which he has acquired under British rule, to vituperate that rule and the English officials who are striving to carry it out for the well-being and happiness of India. Of such officials no man has had a higher claim to the respect and esteem of those over whom he has ruled than Sir Rivers Thompson; and yet, as he leaves the scene of his hard and honourable work, his lips seem to have been "tuned to such grief that they say bright words sadly":—

I trust that the remembrance of me as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal will be at any rate the thought of one who strove with very great imperfection to do his duty in the state of life to which he was called.

With this modest hope he has bidden Bengal farewell. If at last he reaches his Ithaca of repose it has been over no "summer seas," but his honest labours and his good name will survive all calumny and misrepresentation at evil hands. In the meantime rest will doubtless be as grateful to him as the breath of the evening to one who has borne the heat and burden of a trying day.

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.—V.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Connected with the depreciation of silver there are many important economic problems which offer themselves for solution. The most pressing question that is open to discussion is the reduction in the price of wheat, consequent, as is alleged, upon the fall in the rupee. Because it is an incontestable fact that the depreciation of silver has been synchronous with a corresponding fall in the quotations for Indian corn, which have affected the market value of the wheat crops of every continent, it has been hastily concluded that by some occult and inexplicable financial or commercial jugglery the manipulation of the rupee has enabled Indian merchants and producers to compete with other countries in such a way as to supplant them in the field of competition, and thus secure a large volume of trade. We contend that this theory is chimerical, and that the cheapening of wheat results from the active operation of other causes. The occurrences in hygienic, social, commercial, political, and cosmopolitan spheres, are frequently produced in whole or in part by other causes than those to which they are attributed, and nothing is more natural than for superficial reasoners to link the fall in Indian wheat with the depreciation of the rupee, but a close examination of the problem exposes the fallaciousness of the theory.

There are at least six factors that help to control the price of wheat in the open market: climate, rent, cost of carriage, the price of labour, the use of machinery, and extent of production. Three wheat-producing countries, England, India, and the United States, are competitors in the London market, and in the proportion that merchants and producers can secure the greatest average of benefit from all the combined factors, to that degree they are able to undersell their opponents. The British farmer has to contend with bad seasons, increased wages, and high rent, and although to him the cost of carriage is comparatively trifling, yet he is so severely handicapped by the advantages that attend wheat-growing in foreign countries, that he has experienced heavy losses, and lamented the results of Free Trade. The population of England being too large for its area renders us partially dependent on other lands for food supplies; thus India and the United States can compete with each other in our markets, and regulate the charges of home producers according to the degree that they are assisted or hindered by the factors we have enumerated. In the first place, India has the advantage of cheap freightage, the cost of carriage from Chicago to Liverpool being 10s. 2d. per quarter, and from Cawnpore to London only 9s. 3d. per quarter. Then, with reference to climate, in ordinary seasons India would most probably secure a larger yield per acre than the United States. The rent of land must average about the same in both countries. Labour, however, is notoriously cheap in India, where the ryot has few wants, simple tastes, and primitive habits, while the producers of the United States are accustomed to the luxuries and multiplied conveniences of modern civilisation. And here we arrive at the pivot upon which all economic questions must revolve for the supply, and cost of labour is the main factor in every financial problem. We may fearlessly assert that in consequence of the above natural privileges appertaining to the growing of wheat in India, through the opening of the Suez Canal, and the development of railway communication, and by the discovery that the English market absorbs immense quantities of corn, the Indian ryot vigorously extended the cultivation of wheat until the abundance of the supplies lowered prices.

The depreciation of the rupee, though attended with important consequences, has not interfered with the normal operation of economic laws. If it has been shown that the present cheapness of wheat in the markets of England is totally unconnected with the fall in silver, it will follow that many passing inconveniences of commercial and political moment are traceable to other causes than the derangement of the metallic currency. Nothing is so illustrative of the confusion of ideas connected with the question that has been under examination as the readiness with which a number of thinkers have accepted the notion of wheat falling in price in mere sympathetic response to the cheapening of silver in the country from whence the corn was despatched. But it must be confessed that the whole question is involved in some mystery, and that much difficulty is attached to the task of penetrating the fogs of superfluous argument and discussion that have been made to encompass the interesting problem of currency. We may, however, be confident that even if the depreciation of the rupee has been accompanied with a measure of dissatisfaction and loss to one section of the community, and an equivalent profit to other portions of society, the overturning of the equilibrium in the commercial and monetary world is either very partial and temporary, or of such a nature as to be embraced in the ordinary class of contingencies that beset every human enterprise, and clothes with uncertainty the most binding agreements between individuals and nations.

The trickery was discovered, and some important examinations had to be declared null and void.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Englishman states that the following increase has been made in the Bengal Army:—Three battalions Sikh Infantry, one battalion Pioneers, one battalion Goorkhas, and one squadron which will form the 3rd squadron of the Corps of Guides.

LIEUTENANT WATKIN has been placed in charge of the signalling of the Chindwin command under the orders of the officer commanding, who will assist him in establishing communications with the telegraph.

THERE was a sad accident at the 22nd Punjab Infantry Rifle Range at Delhi on the morning of the 22nd ultimo. While the men of the band and some recruits of the above regiment were being put through their class firing at the 200 yards range a bullet made an extraordinary ricochet into the left butt and struck the marker, Havildar Chandan Shah, in the head. The unfortunate man was at once removed to the regimental hospital, where he died within an hour. The bullet, or a portion of it, struck the back of the head and was extracted from under the skin of the left temple, having passed through the brain. The usual inquest was held the same day, the court being of opinion that the firing arrangements were strictly in accordance with rule, and that Chandan Shah's death was purely the result of an accident.

THE Government of India has thanked Major-General Gordon, C.B., and his staff for the admirable arrangements whereby 20,000 troops were received in Rangoon, and despatched up-country since September last, without a hitch. The name of Captain Saunders, R.A., Assistant Quartermaster-General, is specially mentioned.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Rajkote:—"Colonel Fellows, of the 8th Bombay Infantry, the officer commanding here, another of the old Company's officers, has taken his departure after serving in India for over thirty-six years. On Saturday evening he was entertained at the mess by the officers of the regiment, who had invited the residents of the station to meet him. After dinner Colonel Morse proposed the health of the guest of the evening. Colonel Fellows, he remarked, was a most popular officer, and his departure would cause much regret amongst the officers and men of his regiment. Colonel Fellows, in acknowledging the compliment, said that after such a long association with the regiment he must confess that he felt rather sorry to sever his connection with it. On Sunday morning, as Colonel Fellows was leaving, he was met at the bridge by several Parsee gentlemen, who placed garlands of flowers round his neck and wished him God-speed." Colonel Fellows joined the service on December 10, 1850, and was promoted to lieutenant on November 28, 1856. He served in the Persian Expedition of 1856-7, and was present at the bombardment and capture of the forts of Mohumra and subsequent pursuit, obtaining the clasp and medal. During the Indian Mutiny he took part in the operations against the rebels under Tantia Toppe in Khandheish Meywar and the Nizam's country. On December 10, 1862, he obtained his captaincy, and was admitted to the Bombay Staff Corps on September 12, 1866. On December 18, 1870, he became a major, and was raised to a colonel on December 10, 1876. During the Afghan War he was with the troops which marched from Quetta to the relief of Kandahar, and for his services he was mentioned in Orders and obtained a medal. He was appointed colonel of the 8th N.I. on December 27, 1880.

HER MAJESTY'S Troopship Orontes, Commander Theobald, arrived in harbour on the 24th ult. from Singapore, which port she left on the 12th March, via Penang, with the officers and troops of the 1st Battalion of the Buffs, East Kent Regiment. The Orontes left Portsmouth on the 6th October with troops on a round of troop service; she called at Bermuda on the 23rd October; Halifax on the 29th October; Gibraltar on the 23rd November; Barbadoes on the 8th December; Trinidad on the 9th December; Jamaica on the 19th December; Ascension on the 12th January; Simon's Bay on the 3rd February; Natal on the 10th February; Mauritius on the 20th February; Singapore on the 12th March; and Penang on the 15th March. At all these places troops were embarked and disembarked. During the voyage on the midnight of December 2 a soldier jumped overboard and was not rescued. There were seven deaths during the voyage, the deceased including three children and four sailors. The Orontes will leave Bombay for England via the Cape in the beginning of April. She brought 19 officers, 4 ladies, 772 men, 22 women, and 30 children of the 1st Battalion the Buffs, East Kent Regiment. The following are the names of the officers and their families:—Lieutenant-Colonel H. P. Halahan, Major and Mrs. C. E. Reeves, Major F. Newnham Davies, Captain H. Blackburn, Captain G. A. Porter, Lieutenant R. E. Phillips, Lieutenant and Mrs. D. A. Hamilton, Lieutenant G. V. Danglish, Lieutenant C. P. Lloyd, Lieutenant W. H. Booth, Lieutenant A. R. Eustace, Lieutenant L. G. H. Eales, Lieutenant A. J. Stuart, Lieutenant D. J. Annesley, Lieutenant G. G. Hunter, Lieutenant F. Armitage, Lieutenant and Adjutant R. Bayard, Quartermaster J. H. Coombes, Major and Paymaster F. Y. Parkinson.

BENGAL.

It has been definitely settled that the Viceroy shall be asked to open the Ganges Bridge towards the close of the year, probably in November; and work in connection with the bridge is being vigorously pushed on.

A CONFERENCE in connection with the silk trade in Bengal was held in Calcutta on the 21st ult. Sir Edward Buck stated that the Government of India were now resigning all official connection with the investigation into the silk industry into the hands of the Government of Bengal; and he proceeded to explain exactly how matters stood. He spoke in high terms of Mr. Wardle's work, and asked those present to say what should be the policy adopted in future. Some discussion followed, in which a proposal to get an expert from France was highly approved, while the idea of importing cocoons from Australia was rejected.

THE Indian Witness expresses high approval of the address delivered by Sir Rivers Thompson at the unveiling of the memorial to Keshub Chunder Sen at the Calcutta Town Hall on the 19th ult. "There were two reasons," says the Witness, "why the services of Sir Rivers Thompson were peculiarly appropriate. First, because Sir Rivers Thompson's official life of thirty-five years covered the period in which Keshub Chunder Sen had influenced his people; secondly, there is no high official in India that so truly represents the Christian faith as Sir Rivers Thompson. The address was excellent. True, it was not oratorical according to the standard of Quintilian or Demosthenes; but it was eloquent in its analysis and estimate of character; in its fidelity to truth and principle; and in the fearless expression of deep-seated convictions."

A CALCUTTA contemporary suggests that the report of the Departmental Committee on Admiralty contracts should command the early attention of the Government of India. If such peculiarities and irregularities as the report discloses are deeply ingrained in the system which has prevailed in England, is it not possible, asks our contemporary, that some similar defects might be brought to light, if an independent inquiry were held regarding the contracts which are made under the Government of India? Much of the contract business of the Government of India is carried on in England through the storekeepers at the India Office. The reform of this system would be a great benefit to the mercantile community of Calcutta, as well as to Government. If the contracts were taken up by our local firms they would give delivery in Calcutta, and the Government officials would see that they got the articles contracted for in sound and serviceable condition. When the contracts are made in London, the delivery of the goods is virtually made in London. If, when the consignments arrive in India, any official discovers that the goods are not quite up to the mark, of course it is his duty to object, but it may be that his protests will only lead to an unprofitable correspondence and, to his own eventual discomfiture.

A MEETING of the representatives of the Roman Catholic Community of Calcutta was held on the 21st ult. to consider how best to celebrate the entrance of Pope Leo XIII. on the fiftieth year of his priesthood. It was resolved to present an address to the Pope and to raise subscriptions for the purchase of objects of art or local industry to be sent to his Holiness, an influential committee having been put forward to carry out these objects.

THE sub-committee of the Public Service Commission took evidence on the 23rd ult. regarding the Bengal Pilot Service. The evidence of ship captains and merchants was to the effect that this is the finest pilot service in the world. The witnesses examined all considered that Natives might make fairly good pilots in plain sailing, but would be wanting in emergencies where nerve and resource would be required. Witnesses representing the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association asked that a probationary service of two years at sea should be made to apply subsequent to the selection of candidates, for Eurasian lads would not go to sea for two years and thus risk wasting that time should they subsequently be liable to rejection.

MADRAS.

THE local Government having had submitted to them through the Secretary of State proposals on behalf of the company to construct a canal through the island of Ramiswaram, they have replied that the rates laid down for the levy of the canal fees is considered by the Chamber of Commerce, who have had the opinions of a number of masters of vessels, as prohibitive, and that these fees should be reduced and regulated somewhat similar to those levied at present at the Suez Canal.

At the concluding meeting of the Central Committee for the celebration of the Jubilee, the Governor dwelt on the extraordinary unanimity shown by the District Committees in the celebration of the Jubilee, and on the fact that 156 such Committees took part in the presidential address, which thus represents the whole population of the Presidency. This would be a unique feature of the Madras celebration. He thanked the President and the Secretary of the Executive Committee, and noticed that the objects of permanent nature, upwards of one hundred in number, established in various towns throughout the Presidency, in honour of the Jubilee were of such a character as to afford evidence of the progress Madras had made during Her Majesty's reign and the high state of its civilisation. He wished all success to the Technical Institute to be established here. He hoped the masses would benefit materially from the efforts made to educate them in trades and arts. He also believed the Imperial Institute at home would be of great benefit to the people of India. The celebration of the Jubilee here was a good example not only to the governed but to the Government, and a proof that the people were most loyal and devoted to their Sovereign. It was reported that the collections reached nearly a lakh-and-a-half.

THE last has not yet been heard of the Crole case. At the High Court, before Mr. Justice Parker, Mr. Eardly Norton, instructed by Mr. Alasingara Chetty, on behalf of Mr. P. Kotasawmy Tavar, Sub-Zemindar of Ramnad, applied for the issue of a subpoena to Mr. J. H. Garstin (Member of the Board of Revenue) to give evidence and to produce all letters that had been written to him by Mr. C. S. Crole, C.S., from the year 1882 to the year 1886, and all other documents connected with the suit for damages brought by Mr. Kotasawmy Tavar against Mr. Garstin. Mr. Norton, moreover, applied for the issue of a subpoena to the Hon. H. E. Stokes to produce the order from the Secretary of State regarding the matter of landholding by Covenanted Civilians, for the demi-official letter containing the defamatory statements made by the minor Zemindar of Gontamanaickanur to Mr. Garstin, and the affidavit made by Mr. Kotasawmy Tavar which had been forwarded to Government by Mr. C. S. Crole. His lordship ordered notice to be served on defendant's attorneys.

A NATIVE paper says that H.H. the Rao of Cutch and H.H. the Thakore Sahib of Morvee will shortly leave for England for the purpose of being present at the celebration of the Jubilee in that country. The two Native chiefs and H.H. the Thakore Sahib of Gondul, who is at present in Europe, will attend as a deputation on Her Majesty the Queen-Empress and present her with an address.

SIR DINSHAW MANECKJEE PETIT has presented Rs. 500 to the Bombay Undergraduates' Association for the encouragement of vernacular literature. Two prizes of Rs. 100 each will be awarded this year for best essays in Mahratti and Gujerati; two next year in the same way; and the balance left to the third year will be expended as the committee may decide.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

THE death is announced of his Highness the Nawab of Rampur.

HER MAJESTY'S Government has sanctioned the establishment of a University at Allahabad, and a Bill for its incorporation is now before the Local Government.

THE election by the Senate of four new Fellows of the Punjab University has resulted in the election of four English gentlemen:—Mr. Larpent, General Black, C.S.I., Mr. T. Gordon Walker, C.S., and Mr. Coldstream, C.S.

THERE is, a contemporary states, no prospect of the Ganges Cup-meeting taking place this year, as the jungles in the Cawnpore district are now so dense that pig-sticking on a large scale is impossible.

A KASAUJI correspondent writes:—"A few days ago a lady who, with her husband, was riding home to Sanawar after night-fall, had an escape from death which seems little short of a miracle to those who know the spot where the accident took place. Passing along a narrow steep path the ponies took fright, and the hindmost one, which was ridden by the lady, suddenly rearing, both rider and animal went crashing over an almost perpendicular khud. The lady was saved only by her presence of mind in extricating her foot from her stirrup and clutching at some brushwood. By this means she broke her fall, but the pony went rolling on and was subsequently found with his back broken. The distance which the lady fell was measured next day and found to be fifty-one feet. Marvellous to relate she escaped with a few cuts and bruises, and only realised the awful peril in which she had been when she saw by the gleam of lanterns the sacred and horror-stricken face of those whom the news of the accident gathered about her."

THE Punjab Government has managed, indirectly, says the Lahore paper, to give very satisfactory aid to private enterprise in that province. Mr. H. B. Blake, for a long time past Deputy Superintendent of the Lahore Jail, where, among other things, prisoners learn to make carpets, goes at the expiration of his service under Government to Umritsar, there to supervise—for Messrs. Davee Sahai and Chamba Mall, carpet manufacturers—the erection of a new factory on a large scale, and generally to control the weaving operations. At present the buildings and looms of a firm which can hardly meet the demand for its work from America and Paris are simple almost to savagery. A big, grass-grown serai, full of little boys, and about forty of the roughest possible looms, make all that there is at present of the factory. Mr. Blake has a large experience of carpet-weaving, and should be able to do a good deal for a firm which deserves success, if only on the ground that it has resolutely refused to have anything to do with the abominations of aniline dyes and the raw crude tints, which are ruining the phulkaris of the districts and the embroideries of the town.

THE Lahore paper makes a novel proposition. It suggests that in view of the appreciation shown by Natives of the blessings of Western medical skill "Government should, every summer, give six months' leave to a certain number of medical officers, on condition that they travelled through some specified district giving medical aid to the inhabitants. Each officer so employed should be granted a certain establishment; since, without this establishment, his sphere of usefulness would be greatly curtailed, and many surgical operations could not well be undertaken. He should also be allowed to draw on the Medical Storekeeper for a certain amount of hospital equipment, medicines and instruments; and, moreover, should be permitted to indent for two lascar pals for hospital purposes. Finally, he should be granted free carriage for his establishment and for all medical stores. On these terms we think Government would have no difficulty in finding sufficient volunteers, while the cost of these humble Medical Missions could not be very great. At all events, the cost would be amply repaid, the reputation of the British Government for benevolence would spread far beyond our borders, and in time we might reasonably hope that these 'Missions' would be invited and welcomed by tribes now inaccessible to our political officers."

THE WAR TROPHIES COURTS.

The whole aim of this section is to illustrate the Victories of War by a collection of Armour, Arms (including Artillery), Accoutrements, Flags, Medals, and Orders, as well as Characteristic Portraits and Pictures of Engagements. Official and Private Documents and Books—in fact, all that is illustrative of the People, the Country, and the Campaign in each particular War during Her Majesty's reign, 1837-1887. In this way the collection is intended to serve an Educational as well as a Patriotic purpose. The progress in the equipment of our Naval and Military forces will be clearly demonstrated by the comparison of the old and the new. A special feature will be made of the Decorations gained during this period.

Every effort is being made to make this Court complete, and for this purpose loans of any of the above-mentioned articles are particularly invited. Insurance has been most amply arranged for. Transport will be paid by the Committee. Communications should be sent to the Commissioner for War Trophies, A. EGMONT HAKE, Esq., Parliament-mansions, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent character of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.In England—per annum £1 0 0 } In advance,

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 25, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 8th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 6th April; and from Calcutta to the 5th April.

THE Viceroy arrived at Saharanpore on April 1st at midnight, when Sir C. Aitchison was sworn in as a member of the Executive Council. His Excellency and party afterwards proceeded to Dehra Doon.

DURING his shooting expedition in the Maharaja of Durbhanga's preserves Lord Dufferin and his friends bagged six tigers, fifty-three deer, and numerous other game, the finest tiger of the lot being shot by his Excellency.

THE Governor of Madras is gaining great popularity in that Presidency. He has made a tour to several places, and has been cordially received everywhere. Replying to an address at Salem he expressed an earnest wish to assist the Mahomedans in the matter of education, and to further their employment in the public service by all fair and practicable means.

THE Commander-in-Chief, when the mail left, was still on the North-West Frontier. He had held a parade of the troops at Quetta, and, accompanied by General Chesney, had inspected the defensive position in Peshin with a view to strengthen the same.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT are at Mahaleshwar.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY has relieved Sir Rivers Thompson of the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal, and Mr. C. J. Lyall has succeeded Sir Charles Aitchison in the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab.

THE total subscriptions to the Sir Rivers Thompson's memoria, are not far short of Rs. 26,000.

THE return of our Envoy, Colonel Mahomed Ataulah Khan, from Cabul to India, to which attention has been drawn in some newspapers, has, it is stated, no political significance. He had obtained short leave in order to pay a visit to his home in the Punjab. All was quiet in Cabul when he left, but the Amir's troops were on the alert, as rumours of rebellion were prevalent.

IN the event of the current negotiations between England and Russia producing a settlement of the Kham-i-Ab difficulty, a small party will probably be despatched from India to arrange on the spot the details of the demarcation of the frontier.

MAHARAJA HOLKAR leaves Bombay by the steamer of the 29th inst. direct for Marseilles. He proposes to stay some time in Paris and to reach England in good time for the Jubilee celebration. Sir Lepel Griffin accompanies him on special duty with the sanction of the Viceroy, and on his suite, besides several of the officials and Sirdars, are his secretary, Captain Norman Franks, and Dr. Caldecott, of the Central India Horse, as medical officer.

HIS HIGHNESS THE RAO OF CUTCH will also sail from Bombay for England on the 29th instant, to attend the Jubilee celebration; and the Thakores of Morvi and Limbdi will shortly proceed to England for the same purpose. The Rao of Cutch will send Her Majesty an address of congratulation enclosed in a magnificent casket of solid gold—an admirable specimen of the best type of Cutchee art workmanship, and worth Rs. 8,000.

THE Sub-Committee of the Public Service Commission have closed their sittings in Calcutta, and commenced their inquiries at Allahabad.

THE great bridge over the Chuppar Rift on the Harnai Railway was formally opened, and christened the "Louise Margaret Bridge" by her Royal Highness the Duchess of Connaught, on the afternoon of the 27th ult. The Duke of Connaught and Sir Frederick Roberts were present at the ceremony.

THE extension of the Dacca State Railway to Chittagong has been sanctioned. This is one of the new lines which Sir Theodore Hope wishes to see placed in a fair way for commencement before he leaves office.

A RUKHMABAI Defence Committee has been established, having for its objects the protection of Rukhmabai, and the removal of the anomaly involved in punishing disobedience to a decree based on Hindoo matrimonial law by the penalty of imprisonment.

AT the unveiling of the statue of Sir Richard Temple in Bombay the Maharaja Pertab Singh, against whom a decree for Rs. 4,000 had been obtained by the Provincial Bank of Delhi, was confronted by a Sheriff's officer. He soon afterwards paid the money, and left for England by the mail steamer.

H.E. SIR SALAR JUNG, who has recently been in indifferent health, has arrived in Bombay. He has abandoned the intention to take a trip to Ceylon.

THE death is announced at Rewah of Sirdar Kalian Singh, one of the chief nobles of the Rewah State, and the specially appointed guardian of the young Maharaja.

CAPTAIN MORLAND has been elected chairman of the Bombay Municipal Corporation for the ensuing year.

IN the third quarter of last year there was an increase of 165½ miles in the length of railways open throughout India as compared with the corresponding quarter of the previous year, the total number of miles open at the end of September being 12,292½.

11,823 persons were killed by wild animals and venomous snakes in Bengal during 1885-86.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC priest has been convicted by the Madras High Court of abetting bigamy. It appears that in 1877 a Native girl was baptised into the Catholic Church, but that after the father's death the family relapsed into Hinduism. The girl was married to a Native, but afterwards her husband made her former baptism a reason for discarding her. She was subsequently married to a Native Christian.

CUDDALORE, in Madras, is in a state of excitement. It is alleged that the Catholic priest there wrongfully confined a young woman for over a month in the convent, cut her hair off, and subjected her to other ill-treatment. The complaint forms the subject of an inquiry before the Town Magistrate.

THEEBAW's favourite Queen has given birth to a daughter at Rajapore.

LIEUT. A. L. S. OGILVIE, Commissariat Department, has been drowned at Rawul Pindi while attempting to save the life of his dog.

THE City Cotton Press at Indore has been completely burnt down.

OBITUARY.—Lieut. A. L. S. Ogilvie, Sub-Assistant Commissary-General, Rawul Pindi; Sirdar Kahan Singh, of Rewah; Mr. E. S. S. Thompson, Chairman of the Wynand Planters' Association; Dr. Shand, Superintendent of the Chinawan Jail; Mr. E. B. Baker, late Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Bengal; Surgeon P. H. W. Boon, Acting Civil Surgeon and District Sanitary Officer, Coconada.

THE Rao of Cutch and the Thakore Sahib of Morvee will shortly leave for England for the purpose of being present at the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee. The two Native chiefs and the Thakore Sahib of Gondal, who is at present in Europe, will attend as a deputation on Her Majesty, and present her with an address

Notes of the Week.

THE elevation of the present Governor of Madras to a Peerage is a well-timed honour to a deserving official. It was no easy or pleasant task which Mr. Bourke undertook when he accepted the rule of that unfortunate Presidency. We say unfortunate, for we fear that the statement that he went to govern a land filled with discontent was only too true. "In 1831 Madras," says a certain writer, "was the most contented and easily governed Province of India, happy in the memory of a succession of Governors whom it loved or respected. In 1886 no class was well disposed; all had grievances, the state of public affairs was unprecedented, while the land was seething with that agitation against substantial grievances, out of which the worst kind of politics is made."

THIS state of things was not hidden from Mr. Bourke, who courageously accepted the duty of trying to cleanse an Augean stable, and to bring order and contentment out of chaos and distrust. During the short time that he has been in office he has won to himself the confidence of all classes of the community; he has been looking into all matters of administration with a frank fearlessness which convinces all that he will do what is just and right, regardless of any courting of popularity. But this honesty of purpose has already made him one of the most popular Governors that the "benighted" have ever had.

AFGHAN scares are now the current topic of discussion in the Press. The clans of Afghanistan are said to be up, and there is a possibility of matters going hard with the Ameer Abdurrahman Khan, who is described by the Spectator as "a tyrant, with some genius for war and government, but as selfish and unscrupulous as other Asiatic kings." His avarice and grinding exactions have likely enough irritated the ever restless tribes, but it is not probable that they will be strong enough to overthrow his rule. But if this should happen, or he should die, we cannot see that there need be any scare in India or England. Another tyrant equally unscrupulous would rule in his stead, and would profess equal loyalty to a British alliance.

THE danger which appears to be dreaded here is that Afghanistan might fall into anarchy, or under Russian influence. On these points we cannot do better than quote the words of the Spectator last Saturday:—"The Afghan clans no doubt would like anarchy very much, as they always have done; but they know quite well that this particular blessing is for them unattainable. The cause which for a hundred years has compelled them to submit to an Ameer—namely, the necessity of maintaining their independence against Russia, Persia, and England—will compel them to submit still. They can no more split into fragments than the Swiss Cantons can separate from each other; and as the only possible nexus between them is an Ameer, an Ameer they appoint. Once appointed the Ameer will wish to reign, and he can reign only in one way, by keeping both Russians and Englishmen at arms' length. He may take subsidies from either of them; he may sign treaties with either of them, but he cannot admit either of them into his country without assassination or dethronement. That is the one inexorable condition of his rule, and hitherto it has always been obeyed."

It is a great pity that the Scribes and Pharisees, who are either writing or prophesying all evil things against the continuance of British rule in India, in consequence of Afghan rebellions or Russian intrigues, will not learn the truth, and the whole truth, of the matters they discuss. If Russia has a desire to become the possessor of Afghanistan she must have a very extraordinary taste for conquest indeed. But it would still be more extraordinary if English public opinion would sanction another invasion of Afghanistan by British troops, with the insane idea of thus warding off a Russian invasion of India.

THIS would be exactly the game which Russia would like us to play, because it would be playing into her hands. Can we not wait on events, keeping cautious watch meanwhile? Surely it is wiser to allow the Afghans to settle their own disputes in their own way, even if it is a throat-cutting way, than make them more bitter enemies by meddling interference. And, if we have to fight Russia, let us fight her at our own threshold of India. We can give her a very warm reception there.

Again, to quote from the admirable article on Afghanistan in last week's Spectator: "The British Government would look wise indeed if, just as it had quarrelled with the Afghans by the occupation of Candahar, it heard that a Russian army was advancing, not to Herat, but to dictate a treaty of submission at the gates of Teheran. We can understand the Indian wish for action; but there are times when the only method of acting strongly is to wait, and in Afghanistan this is one of them."

THE serious loss of life amongst the lascars in the wreck of the P. and O. steamer Tasmania should call attention to the very grave question of whether lascar sailors should be employed in any numbers on this side of the Suez Canal. They used not to be so formerly, but economy (heedless of any other consideration) is now the order of the day with all shipping companies. The lascars make very good sailors in their own warm latitudes; at the wreck of the Tasmania they were worse than useless, they were panic-stricken and helpless. Benumbed, too, with cold, many of them died during the night. British passenger steamers should be made to carry a certain proportion of English sailors as their crew—real sailors we mean, not makeshifts—for English sailors in the hour of danger seldom fail in pluck and nerve. The P. and O. Company, one of the richest in the world, and which has just got a renewal of its mail contracts to India and Australia on very favourable terms, should not be allowed to leave its passengers at the mercy of a lot of cowardly and feeble lascars in case of accidents, which happily, with this company's steamers, are of rare occurrence.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 24.

The news of the resignation of Sir Salar Jung, Prime Minister of Hyderabad, announced at the beginning of last week, was somewhat unexpected, although it had been known for a long time past that his relations with his master had become strained. It is now a little over three years since Lord Ripon, when installing the boy Nizam, sanctioned the bold experiment of giving him a boy Prime Minister. For some time everything appeared to go well, and it seemed as if Sir Salar Jung was likely to rival the fame of his illustrious father. But it soon became evident that the two young men did not get on well together, and the breach gradually widening, some months ago the Government deputed Colonel Marshall, an experienced official from the Punjab, to act as private secretary and confidential adviser to the Nizam. Colonel Marshall tried to effect a reconciliation, and might possibly have succeeded had the Minister remained in office. The latter, however, has now resigned, giving as a reason that his health is failing, and that he requires rest and change, which he intends to seek by a trip to England or a prolonged visit to some hill station. The Nizam behaved generously, and granted the retiring Minister half-pay—7,000 rupees monthly—for life. He also offered to pay his (Sir Salar's) late father's debts, amounting to thirty lakhs, and to receive payment of a private debt of five lakhs due by Sir Salar to himself by yearly instalments of 50,000 rupees without interest. It is believed that the Minister's successor will be selected from among three great nobles, Bushur-ud-Dowla, Khoorshed Jah, and the Munir-ul-Mulk. The first is now on his way to England. The last is a brother of the ex-Minister.

The order of the Supreme Government for the closing of the Madras Gunpowder Factory is evoking much indignation and strong protests from the southern Presidency. The Madras Chamber of Commerce has addressed the Indian Government on the subject, and, not receiving a satisfactory reply, has appealed to the Secretary of State. Meanwhile the Indian Government repeated its order, whereupon the Governor of Madras telegraphed to the Secretary of State asking him to suspend final judgment until the receipt of another despatch from Madras. The protests against the order are based upon an allegation that the Bengal and Bombay gunpowder factories could not supply the requirements of India in the event of war. In support of this argument it is pointed out that at the beginning of the last Afghan war Bengal indented upon Madras for 100,000lb. of powder, which was at once supplied, and it is urged that it is necessary to maintain the Madras factory to supplement the factories of the other Presidencies. The Chamber of Commerce goes so far as to express an opinion that it would be better to discontinue the harbour works than to close the factory at a time like the present. If the arguments and protests of the Madras Government and public are well-founded, the closing of the factory would appear to be very short-sighted economy.

The interest excited by the case of the Hindoo lady Rukhmabai, and the sympathy shown for her have induced her husband, Dadjee Bkikajee, to publish a pamphlet, giving his version of the case. According to him the real bone of contention is not Rukhmabai herself, but her property. He says that the marriage took place with the approval of all her relations when he was twenty and she was thirteen years old, and that his circumstances were then as well known to her family as they are now. He denies that he is properly described as an ignorant coolie, and contends that he is as well educated and intelligent as she is. He asserts that when he asked her to live with him in 1884, no objection was raised on account of his health or education, but her stepfather merely stipulated that a suitable house for her should be provided. Before this was done the stepfather died, and then the lady's mother and grandfather for the first time objected to let her join him, their real object, being he says, to retain the management of property worth 25,000 rupees, to which she is entitled. He professes to believe that she has no special objection to him, but is merely acting under the directions of her relations, who have their own selfish ends to serve. Such is the husband's story. Even if his statement were correct they are not likely to induce the public to change its opinion of the case, seeing that almost every line shows complete indifference on his part to Rukhmabai's wishes and feelings.

The report on the foreign land trade for the first eight months of the last financial year show a considerable increase, but almost entirely under the head of exports. As regards particular countries, there was an increase of imports from Khelat, Seistan, Cabul, Cashmere, Tibet, Nepaul, Bhotan, and Tipperah, and a large decrease in those from Upper Burma, Karennee, Siam, and Zim-meh. The increase in exports was chiefly in those to Khelat, Seistan, Cabul, Bajour, Cashmere, Nepaul, and Sikhim, while there was a decrease in those sent to nearly every other country.

The reports from the Bengal indigo districts describe the prospects as good and the weather as favourable. The spring sowings are now completed. The accounts from Behar are not so good, the cold nights and heavy rain having done much damage.

It is rumoured at Lahore that some of the tribes inhabiting the Black Mountain are threatening to raid into the Agrore Valley, in the British district of Hazara. The reason given is that Abdulla Khan, a connection of the Khan of Agrore, has been dispossessed of some land to which he considers he has a right, and he has induced the tribes to take up his quarrel. Even if the raid occurs it is not likely to cause anxiety.

A strange story of human sacrifice comes from the Madras Presidency. A woman was supposed to be possessed with a devil, and in consequence to have remained barren. Her father consulted an exorcist, who said that a human sacrifice was necessary. Accordingly one night her father, the exorcist, and five or six others met, and after some religious ceremonies sent for the selected victim. He came without suspecting treachery, and was plied with drink till he was senseless, when his head was cut off, and his blood mixed with rice was offered to some deity. The body was then hacked so as to deceive the police and thrown into a tank. The murderers, having been arrested, have made a full confession.

NEPAUL.

The Englishman has received a report that General Khudga Shumshed Jung Bahadoor, who was removed from the office of Commander-in-Chief a few weeks ago, has been deported to Palpa, a fort to the north of Gorakhpore. His successor is said to be very popular.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, APRIL 23.

A destructive fire occurred last night in the western district of Mandalay, near the city moat. The fire, which lasted two hours, was of accidental origin. It commenced with the ignition of a haystack by a woman who was cooking near it. About 200 houses were destroyed. A fresh breeze was blowing, and it was difficult to check the flames. Some troops were present, but there was no disturbance. The conflagration raged round the Bombay and Burma Corporation's premises which, however, escaped all injury, being surrounded with high walls.

The creditors of the late Burmese Government are about to be paid by the Government of India. Mr. Rice, an Assistant Commissioner, has been ordered to investigate the claims. The inquiry will commence next week.

AFGHANISTAN.

The news regarding the Ghilzai revolt is most confused and contradictory, and it is very difficult to separate the true statements from the false. This much, however, appears certain. About the beginning of this month Colonel Sikander Khan marched from Candahar against the insurgent, Hotak Ghilzais. Mahomed Isa Khan, Governor of Maruf, while on his way to join him, was attacked by the rebels, who killed him and fifty of his men, and captured the remainder of his party, numbering 200 men. This mischance compelled Sikander Khan to fall back upon a position between Maruf and Khelat-i-Ghilzai, where he seems to have intrenched himself. News has reached the Indian Government of an action between him and the rebels, which ended in the defeat of the latter, with the loss of 500 men; while the Ameer's troops are said to have lost fifty killed. No further particulars have yet been received. The northern Ghilzais do not appear to have risen yet; it is said that this is owing to their want of a leader.

It is rumoured on the frontier that the insurgents have proclaimed Mahomed Shah Khan Ameer, and that a son of Azim Khan, Abdurrahman's uncle, has promised to join him from Balkh. This rumour, however, must be received with caution. So far the Ameer has shown no want of confidence, and, despite reports to the contrary, he has made no appeal for help to the Indian Government. He is said to have summoned the Khan of Lalpoora to Cabul, and to be withdrawing his troops from the Jellalabad district and pushing them southwards towards Ghuzni. Rumours of the wildest nature continue to circulate on the frontier, and the more unfavourable they are to the Ameer the more readily are they believed.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE INDIAN TEA INDUSTRY.

(Financial News.)

There are probably few British industries of equal magnitude to that of which this article treats which attract so little attention from the public, and the reasons are not far to seek. Its operations have been conducted at a distance, and mainly by private enterprise. Few large concerns have come to the public for capital, and of these some have had a career which has not favourably impressed the public with tea companies; while, owing to the small number of shares floating in the market, and the wide margin made for them in the Stock Exchange quotation, buyers and sellers have been hindered from operating. The time is possibly at hand when this class of investment will receive more general attention,—(1) on account of the present prosperity of the industry, and the growing popularity of Indian and Ceylon tea with the home trade; (2) from the recuperative power shown by estates whose future at one time seemed doubtful; (3) through the high return upon the capital yielded, which will be shown by many companies whose reports will shortly be published, and this, too, in a year when the price of tea in the London market has fallen to a lower level than has hitherto been touched.

A few figures illustrate the growth of the industry. In 1876 the import was 29,500,000lbs., in 1881 it was 45,750,000lbs., and in 1886 it reached 76,500,000lbs. The consumption for the corresponding years was 26,750,000lbs., 43,750,000lbs., and 68,500,000lbs., while during the current season ending May 31, the import will reach 78,000,000lbs., and the consumption from 75,000,000lbs. to 76,000,000lbs. The feature, however, which arrests attention is the proportion of Indian and Ceylon tea taken for home consumption, which during the past four months has risen to 50 per cent. of the whole, as against 30 per cent. in 1881 and 17 per cent. in 1876. Indian tea, as a matter of fact, is slowly but surely ousting its rival and obtaining command of the market. This has not been achieved without a lowering of price to compete with the cheaper rates at which China tea sells; but the reduction has been slow, the average value of Indian tea in London being about 1s. 1½d. per lb. for the years 1882-85, while it is now estimated to be 1s. per lb. This, however, has been anticipated, and has been met by a considerable reduction of the cost of production, effected (1) by consolidation of estates; (2) by increased use of machinery; (3) by more scientific methods of cultivation and manufacture, through which finer and larger yields are secured. India, indeed, having always beaten China in quality, now competes in price, most estates laying down their crops well under 1s. per lb. in London, and some under 8d. per lb., while it is admitted that a further reduction in cost is practicable.

Among the companies known to the London market the largest is the Assam Company, which has 7,710 acres under plant, an annual yield of 2,500,000lbs. to 2,750,000lbs., and which has paid dividends averaging over 16 per cent. during the last ten years of its working. The next in extent is the Land Mortgage Bank of India, owning about 7,600 acres of bearing plant, with an annual production of about 2,000,000 lbs., upon which a profit of £28,000 was made last season ending May, 1886, and which will be a valuable property to the shareholders. The Jorehaut Company follows with 4,360 acres, known as producing some of the finest tea grown in Assam, and with a dividend record of 12½ per cent. in 1884, 15 per cent. in 1885, and 15 per cent. in 1886, while for the current season a very satisfactory financial statement will shortly be issued. Among other successful companies accessible to the investor are the Darjeeling, the Borelli, the Lebong, the Jhanzie Association, and the Scottish Assam Company; while as a specimen of the recuperative power alluded to we may mention the Luckimpore Company, respecting which a good report is shortly expected, and the Upper Assam Company, now through careful management earning large annual profits on its crop.

It is difficult to estimate the average return upon the 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 sterling invested, owing to the large proportion of Estates in private hands, but the best proof that it is a substantial one is that of late years only one company of any size has come for capital to the London market. The following table, prepared from the latest published accounts, gives a fair index to the general position of the industry. The figures selected, as affording the best guide to investors, are the capital per acre, yield per acre, average of prices obtained for the tea during the past three or four seasons, and the cost of production during the last year (1885-6) for which accounts have been issued:—

Assam Co. ...	£24	340	1 0 ⁹ / ₁₆	0 10
Land Mortgage Bank ...	43	262	1 2 ¹ / ₄	0 10 ¹ / ₂
Jorehaut Co. ...	23	291	1 2 ¹ / ₄	1 0
Brahmapootra Co. ...	49	463	1 2 ¹ / ₄	0 9 ¹ / ₂
British Indian Company ...	116	286	1 0 ¹ / ₂	0 9 ¹ / ₂
Doom Dooma Co. ...	69	700	1 0	0 8 ¹ / ₂
Darjeeling Co. ...	81	307	1 5 ¹ / ₂	0 11 ¹ / ₂
Jhanzie Association	37	312	1 2 ¹ / ₄	1 0 ¹ / ₂
Lebong Co. ...	65	345	1 4	0 11

From these figures it appears that those companies with a low capital per acre of plant, or those noted for the high character of their produce, are in a strong position, and should prosper, even if the competition with other producing countries should still further reduce the price of tea. In the annual reports, due in June, some will show a higher price obtained, many of them a lower cost of production, and the majority of them a return of from 6 per cent. to 9 per cent. to the investor at present share values. We have spoken of a possible lowering of the price of tea by competition of other producing countries, of which Ceylon and China are the chief. As regards Ceylon, its increased consumption is probably effected at the expense of China tea, which it easily displaces, owing to its superiority; while as regards China tea, it can now only injure Indian by being imported at such a low cost as to undersell its rivals, and this, we understand, is not admitted by the China merchants to be possible.

SIR. R. THOMPSON.
(Pioneer.)

At the very successful banquet given in his honour in the Calcutta Town Hall, Sir Rivers Thompson made very pointed reference to the "impossible task" which a Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal often has of "reconciling two public opinions;" and he went on to say that while "his sincerest and strongest desire had been to exercise an indifferent impartiality he had never attempted to serve two masters." It may be doubted whether it was worth a Lieutenant-Governor's while to vindicate him self against aspersions arising either from sheer ignorance or premeditated malice; but there can be no question that Sir Rivers Thompson has a good deal of cause for complaint. At one time he has been virulently assailed as a determined foe of the Native, and at another as the enemy of the European. To take the latest instance in which it has fallen to his lot to give a decision, we find the Native Press of Bengal receiving his decree in the Rungpore Deer Case with a perfectly indiscriminating praise, while English papers, which ought to have known better, urged that the decision argued an indecent haste to conciliate Native opinion. There have been during his rule numerous instances where the position of the critics has been reversed—where the Native Press have accused the Lieutenant-Governor of all that is malevolent and vile. Needless to say these criticisms have not been worth the ink it took to set them down. Doubtless the administration of Sir Rivers, like the administration of every one else, has had its mistakes; but it is not therefore necessary, it is altogether unjust, to accuse him of studied partisanship or weak-kneed tergiversation. It is possible to attach too much importance to the utterances of critics whose fairness has been repeatedly and patently discredited.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

If the present zeal for the thing called "technical education" be a sincere desire to somehow assist the classes which hang clamouring for bread on the skirts of the Government that taught them English, the prettiest and most effective notion would be a scheme with an infinity of heads and sub-heads, comprising all manner of subjects, from photo-zincography to mechanical drawing—a scheme with plenty of certificates and hundreds of scholarships from Rs. 3 a month upwards. Any intelligent Committee or Commission could work this out to admiration—on paper. The educated Native knows what a scholarship means; and in return for the money would furnish the Government with a vast appearance of energy after the manner of the Rajah's horse which gambols, curvets and prances always in the same place. He—the man not the horse—would pass examinations, secure certificates and fill rosy reports; while the Native Press applauded "the liberal and far-seeing action of the Government." Such a scheme would look well, and would last for ten or fifteen years—if it were not handled too rudely. If, on the other hand, the Government wishes to benefit a really dumb class—the artizan—its best and kindest policy would be to retire gracefully from the scene, and devote its leisure to actively touting for the increased flow of capital into the country; at the same time refraining from hampering with unnecessary legislation the non-official classes. As the money comes in, non-official enterprise, which after all is a factor in the government of the country, will for its own ends, and from a strictly business point of view, train Natives—as it has already trained them, up to a certain point of excellence—in the comprehension of machinery and the out-turn of work according to English requirements. The time of training, as the factories and the Railway workshops can tell us, will be long, but there will be little danger of the supply exceeding the demand or a class unfit for manual labour being semi-educated out of its grooves. In the process of time there may or may not grow up a caste, in the centres of manufacture, who will work for Englishmen after English methods. At all event, the more English money there is in the country the more Natives will be fed; and that we may assume is what the Government wants.

AN ANGLO-CHINESE ALLIANCE.

(Times of India.)

We have in these columns emphasised the fact that Persia is a most important factor in the Anglo-Russian problem, and urged that no stone should be left unturned to re-establish British influence at the Court of the Shah. We now direct attention to the immense value of another possible alliance, namely, one with China. China is undoubtedly thoroughly alive to the importance to us of such an alliance. But she cannot but see as well that her own interests in the matter are identical. China has already begun to feel the impact of the Russian advance towards the East, she has already suffered no small losses of territory, and her supremacy in her great outlying provinces is being slowly but surely undermined by the spreading authority of Russia. Agents of the Czar are already at work in Mongolia and Eastern Turkestan, paving the way for the advent of troops on the scene. A Russian general, who lately returned to St. Petersburg from a mission of this kind, represents, from an all too clear motive, that the inhabitants of these districts are longing to become subjects of the Great White Czar, whose name "figures in their imaginations as the symbol of magical power and authority." Of course, all this about Asiatics panting for the rule of the Czar is written by a Russian officer, for whom the allowance must be made that the wish is father to the thought. But the statements go the round of the Russian Press, are believed in by the Russian people, and serve as an incentive to further Russian annexations in Central Asia. That China realises the position of affairs and the danger to her Empire in allowing the thin edge of the wedge to be inserted, is proved by her recent firm and courageous attitude towards Russia. She must also see that in England lies her chief bulwark of safety against Russian aggression. Hence it is clear that all the circumstances are in our favour for the conclusion now of a firm alliance with China, the advantages of which to England in the event of war with Russia would be simply inestimable. It has for long been the fashion to scoff at the military and naval strength of China, but every power that has had practical experience of the Chinese during recent years has come to have somewhat more of a wholesome dread for them. To Russia China must always be a source of danger, and a factor to be reckoned with in the event of European complications. With a diversion on his Eastern frontiers, the strength of the Czar's army for operations elsewhere would be materially weakened, and any loss of prestige through a defeat at the hands of the Chinese might undo the whole of Russia's work in Central Asia. With these considerations before us, we can see that England can greatly strengthen, if not render impregnable, her position in India by simply making a judicious choice of friends and putting forth every effort to inspire their confidence with a view to mutual advantages. The neglect which has been suffered to take place with regard to Persia should serve as a lesson to us in our dealings with China. In Persia the work of regaining our former paramount position must be a matter of difficulty, as there is a long past of years of inertness to undo. Europe is just now awaking to the fact that China is far from being une quantite negligeable in the world's politics. It behove us then to bestir ourselves, look the future in the face, and not allow some other Power to be first in the field.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON'S FAREWELL.

(Pioneer.)

A large and influential gathering of Europeans and Natives was recently held at the Montgomery Hall, Lahore, under the auspices of the Indian Association, to present farewell addresses to Sir Charles Aitchison. Considerable pains had been taken to illuminate and decorate the building, and the entertainment was in every respect a success. Seven addresses were presented, which referred to the many benefits conferred on the province during Sir Charles Aitchison's rule, especially the spread of education, the introduction of local self-government, and the scheme for extending medical aid to the women of India. By rendering himself accessible to the meanest of his subjects his honour had secured their unflinching loyalty. Sir Charles Aitchison, in replying after a few introductory remarks, said:— "If I understand your feelings to me aright, you would not wish me to refer to my own administration of the province, a subject I could not touch upon without the painful admission of many shortcomings, in spite of all the kind things you have said. I will, therefore, as this is the last opportunity I shall have, only impress upon you in all affection and earnestness the deep responsibility you take upon yourselves by associating together for the common furtherance of various public ends. The force of associated opinion is not the aggregate force of the individual opinions, but something infinitely greater in the language of physical science; it is chemical and not dynamic; and if it is incumbent on every individual who takes part in public affairs, and endeavours to form or to guide public opinion, to see that his aims are high, his motives pure, his criticisms just, and his utterances calm and sincere, the obligations imposed on associations is immeasurably greater, though the sense of the responsibility is often apt to be obscured or destroyed. The duties, then, which you have voluntarily taken upon you are neither to be lightly conceived nor perfunctorily performed. I am glad of this opportunity of openly acknowledging the real assistance I have often obtained in the conduct of public affairs from some of your own and other similar associations in the province. We live in a time of transition; the old order is changing and giving place to new. It is a sign of life and growth. The direction which things may take from time to time cannot fail to be greatly influenced by the views of the educated Native community; and while it behoves every person in high office to keep his mind open to the legitimate influence of enlightened public opinion, it is equally incumbent on you, if you would play a useful part, to keep in sympathy with your rulers, so that you may understand and not misjudge them in their endeavours for the public good, and may ease from their shoulders somewhat of the growing burden of government. Whatever faults and shortcomings may with truth be imputed to it by its worst enemies, or by good friends who would try their unpractised hand at reform, the British Government when the worst is said is still the best Government that India has ever seen, and has shown itself more zealous of the welfare of its subjects and more solicitous for their true prosperity and happiness than any Government in ancient or modern times. And now I will say farewell. I only wish I had words adequately to express all I owe to you. I am leaving you for good, and I thank God I leave the province in profound peace even in its remotest borders. I shall carry away with me the liveliest recollection of your kindness and goodwill, and an affectionate regard for the province in which I began my Indian career, and where I have made many friends whom I love hardly less than my own flesh and blood."

A NATIVE SANDHURST NEEDED.

(Times of India.)

We should like to see an increase in the number of European officers. That we are not likely to get; and failing that it is necessary to turn the Native material to the best possible account. In the first place young Natives of respectable family should be trained in their future duties before joining a regiment. For this purpose the foundation of a Native Military College is necessary, on the same lines as the institution at Sandhurst, and this proposal has, we believe, the approval of the present Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army. The entrance examination should of course be competitive and open to all classes of the Native community. It should also be of such a standard as to ensure the admission of those men only who by their intellectual attainments are fitted to be commissioned officers. With the preparation this college would give him a young Native would, on being gazetted to a regiment, be able to enter on his duties at once, and being already practically and theoretically trained would be capable of rendering valuable assistance to his European officers. Added to these advantages commanding officers would have men of tried intelligence to deal with, and, what is much also to the point, men who would not associate with the rank and file in the reprehensible way that at present exists. Nothing is so detrimental to discipline as the indiscriminate association that now goes on between Native officers and those under them. That it does take place to an almost unlimited extent cannot be doubted, and the cause is not far to seek. Men who have been shoulder to shoulder in the ranks or have gone about the lines together in a half nude condition when young, are not likely to throw off the intimacy thus engendered when one or other of them obtains a commission. The Native officer of the present day hardly if ever associates with civilian Natives of the better class, who naturally decline to have anything to do with men, who in many cases can only just write their names, and whose family connections are of the lowest description. Amongst Natives, education is at a very much higher standard than formerly, and the difficulty of obtaining employment, consequently on this, causes large numbers of young men to remain idle who would be invaluable as young and intelligent military officers.

BENGAL.

LAST year not a single seagoing vessel on its way to and from the dry docks collided with the Hughli-bridge, but no less than 130 country boats ran into it. Fortunately none of the collisions were of a serious nature, no lives being lost, nor was any damage of importance done. Rs. 52,734 was spent in keeping the bridge in good repair, and the whole of the machinery and gear belonging to the movable centre worked in a thoroughly efficient manner.

THE latest reports from the indigo districts continue favourable. Rain has fallen over some factories in both Northern and Southern Bengal, which has done good to the spring sowings, and also to the October plant. In Behar the weather has been favourable, although in Chupra the nights have been rather cold, which has somewhat checked the growth of the plant; it has otherwise done no harm, and the resowings, which have not been on an extensive scale, are doing well.

THE Sub-Committee of the Public Service Commission took evidence at Calcutta on March 28 on the Public Works Department and the Railway Service. Major Boughey, manager of the Eastern Bengal State Railway, said his experience was the same as that of the heads of commercial undertakings. Natives were largely employed under him, but with a very costly system of European supervision. If he could get the supervision equally well done by Natives, he would, of course, employ them. There was a Government of India Circular, dated 1879, directing the employment of Natives in superior posts, especially in the traffic department, when suitable men could be obtained. He did not know of any such men. With regard to the engineering staff, he thought it would be difficult to get qualified Natives as subordinate superintendents, for, as a rule, men who received engineering education in this country were not so efficient as men trained in England. He considered that the course of education at Roorkee was capable of improvement. Mr. W. Nicholson, Superintendent of Way and Works on the Eastern Bengal State Railway, gave similar evidence. Mr. Barclay, Traffic Superintendent, Eastern Bengal State Railway, thought Native stationmasters answered pretty well as a rule at smaller stations. He was in favour of Europeans for the larger stations, for they possessed self-reliance, sobriety, and independence.

THE directors have made the following changes in the Bank's establishment:—Mr. R. Lithgow to act as Agent at Hyderabad during Mr. Lemou's absence on short leave; Mr. J. Coutts to be Acting Agent at Allahabad, vice Mr. Logan, who has been granted leave to Europe; Mr. W. Huntley to be Acting Agent at Lucknow, vice Mr. MacBean, who has been granted leave to Europe; Mr. H. F. Freshwater to be Acting Agent at Patna, vice Mr. Leslie, who has been granted leave to Europe.

MADRAS.

THERE seems to be now reason to doubt that orders have been issued for the closing of the Madras Gunpowder Factory, notice having been received by all the employes that their services will not be required after the 1st of June next, by which time the supply of powder in stock will have been disposed of.

ONE of the questions raised by the Finance Committee when in Madras was whether it would not be possible to effect a saving by either amalgamating the post of Inspector-General of Registration with some other appointment, or reducing the salary at present given. The local Government have, in reply, informed the Government of India that they do not consider amalgamations advisable or feasible, as the work of supervising the Registration Department is of such a nature as to fully occupy the undivided time and attention of one officer, and that, consequently, if the duties of Inspector-General of Registration were amalgamated with those of any other appointment, the result would be that the work of both appointments would be but indifferently performed. They have, however, expressed their readiness to agree to a reduction of the salary attaching to the post from Rs. 1,500 to Rs. 1,250 on the occurrence of a vacancy.

At the suggestion of the Finance Committee one of the offices to which it was proposed to apply the financial shears in Madras was the Harbour Trust Board, and the Government requested the Trustees to consider what reductions they could make in their establishment. The Board have at last replied to the Government that they do not consider that any reductions are at present practicable, as they have to keep up an establishment far in excess of the daily average requirements to meet the advent of several steamers at one time. They further state that their income has been lately reduced when the harbour dues were lowered, but that the duties to be performed by the Board's establishment remain precisely the same. They, however, say that the matter will be borne in mind in future estimates, and the Government still expresses its opinion that some reduction is feasible.

BOMBAY.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL has appointed the First Assistant Collector of Bombay to be a member of the committee on the future extension of Bombay, in the place of the collector of Bombay, and has directed that he shall act as secretary to the committee in the place of the Under Secretary to Government, Public Works Department.

SIR FRANK SOUTER has met with a somewhat serious accident. While riding with one or two companions across the Byculla Flats his horse made a fault in jumping a low wall and fell, throwing him on his head. The helmet broke the fall somewhat, but Sir Frank became insensible. The horse fell over on him, crushing up the stirrup in which the rider's foot still remained. No bone has been broken, but the ankle is bruised. His companions got him free of the horse, and he recovered consciousness.

THE deputation which has been appointed by his Highness the Nizam to represent the Hyderabad State at the Jubilee celebration in London in June sailed for Europe in the Italian mail steamer, the Domenico Balduino. The chief of the deputation is his Highness's brother-in-law, the Nawab Busheerud-Dowlat, Amir-i-Akber, Osman Jah Bahadur. The Nawab is accompanied by Colonel G. W. Cockburn as his Chief Secretary, Syed Rukuodeen and Abdoola Beg, Aides-de-Camp; Mr. Dosab-hoy Nusserwanjee Chenoy, Private Secretary; Colonel Arbutnot, and Mrs. and Miss Arbutnot; Dr. Emadul Huk; a Persian Secretary; and some five or six attendants. After visiting the chief cities in the south of Europe en route the Nawab hopes to arrive in London about the middle of May. The Nawab and his Staff lunched with his Excellency the Governor at Malabar Point, and attended the unveiling of the Temple Statue.

News has been received from Bhosawal of the death of Mr. Hughes C.S., from the effects of the violence of a tiger. Mr. Hughes, accompanied by an officer in the Forest Department, and a number of Native beaters, went to a spot some six miles from Chopda, and forty-six from Bhosawal, in quest of a tiger, which was known to frequent the neighbourhood. The search was successful, and the beast was wounded by the Forest officer, but afterwards got away. The following day the search was continued. Mr. Hughes took up a position in a tree, but on the beaters finding out the animal's whereabouts he came down and walked up to it. The tiger, though wounded, had still the power to do considerable mischief, and it charged Mr. Hughes (who made an ineffectual attempt to fire), seized him by one of the legs and then threw him down. It also seized the other limb and bit through both his arms, inflicting injuries which ended fatally. All this time the Forest officer and the beaters had not been idle, and they shot the tiger dead. Mr. Hughes was removed to the dispensary at Chanda, while Dr. Deane, Surgeon to the G.I.P. Railway at Bhosawal, was sent for. Immediately on his arrival, Dr. Deane ordered the patient to be removed in a doolie to Bhosawal, which afforded better facilities for treatment. It was found that Mr. Hughes had been dreadfully mauled, there being no fewer than thirty-three deep wounds, all bites, in various parts of the body, while the back bore ugly claw marks. At Bhosawal the injured man passed a very restless night, and he ceased to breathe while his wounds were being dressed on the following morning.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

HIS Highness the Raja of Ponch has given a second donation of Rs. 500 towards the Lady Aitchison Hospital, Lahore.

A LITTLE railway conference was held in Allahabad to settle the details of the junction of the East Indian, Indian Midland, and Oudh and Rohilkhand lines at Cawnpore; the direct approach for the Oudh trains to the East Indian station there; and the junction of the Oudh and Rohilkhand line with the East Indian at Magal Sarai, in connection with the opening of the Benares bridge. The principal officials present were Sir Bradford Leslie and Colonel Luard, representing the East Indian line; Mr. A. C. Creegan and Colonel Wallace, Indian Midland; Mr. Jenkins and Colonel Dowden, Oudh and Rohilkhand; and Mr. I. O'Callaghan, Rajputana-Malwa. The questions had long been under discussion, and we understand they were settled to the satisfaction of all concerned.

PROBABLE SCARCITY IN THE PUNJAB.—The official reports of the crops throughout the Punjab are most lamentable. With the exception of the irrigated parts of the Ferozepore and Mooltan districts, all the reports are bad; Rawal Pindi, where the estimate is "average," being the best off. Next comes Julundur, where the report is only "very indifferent." In the Delhi and Umballa districts the state of the crops is "unfavourable." In Armitsar, Mooltan and Dera Ismail Khan they are "suffering for want of rain." In Peshawar "very poor;" in Sialkot, "injured by continual winds;" in Lahore, simply "bad;" in Shahpur, "drying up for want of rain;" and finally, in the unirrigated parts of the Ferozepore District, they are described as "deplorable." The fall of temperature of the last few days is, however, as far as it goes, a favourable sign, as indicating broken weather approaching from the south. Unless rain, and a good deal of it, comes soon, great suffering is assured.

THE FIRST TELEGRAPH LINE IN INDIA.—FROM CALCUTTA TO KEDGEREE ONLY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—With reference to the rather impertinent, and not over accurate or impartial, critique on "Sketches of Some Distinguished Anglo-Indians," in the Saturday Review of April 9, I beg leave to be allowed to state that the reviewer, in his customary oracular fashion, asserts:—"The first telegraph line in India, laid down by Sir W. O. Shaughnessey, now Sir W. Brooke, extended from Calcutta to Saugor Island, and not only to Kedgerree." Now, in spite of this contradiction, the real fact of the matter is as follows, which proves that I was right in saying that the first line of telegraph opened in India was from Calcutta to Kedgerree only. The despatch from Lord Dalhousie to the Court of Directors, dated April 23, 1852 (in Parliamentary Return, No. 243, dated May 16, 1855), begins:—"We have the honour to transmit the accompanying report from the Government of Bengal, announcing the completion, by Dr. W. B. O'Shaughnessey, of the Line of Electric Telegraph from Calcutta to Kedgerree." Saugor Island was thought of as the terminus, and Dr. O'Shaughnessey certainly advanced it, but the line does not in any way appear to have been established then in the first instance.—Yours obediently,

W. F. B. L.

UNCLAIMED DIVIDENDS ON COLONIAL STOCKS.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—One of the subjects discussed at a recent meeting of the Colonial Conference was, "The large amount of Unclaimed Dividends upon Colonial Stocks, and the desire of the Colonies that these should be treated in precisely the same way as Unclaimed Dividends upon Consols are now treated."

May I venture to suggest that greater publicity as to unclaimed dividends on Government Stocks is urgently needed? At present the procedure is as follows:—

All dividends on Government Stocks unclaimed for ten years or upwards are handed over to the National Debt Commissioners till claimants appear. Then full particulars of the amount of the stock, &c., are advertised by the Bank of England authorities, and further claimants inquired for.

Surely it would be more business-like to advertise these particulars at the date of the transfer to the Commissioners, and also add, in a schedule to the annual Parliamentary return issued by the Bank of England respecting unclaimed dividends, full particulars of all unclaimed dividends on Government Stocks.

The East India Unclaimed Stock Act, 1885, also provides that all unclaimed stocks or dividends undistributed for ten years or upwards shall be transferred to the Government of India. The Act, however, contains no provision for advertising the names and descriptions of the stockholders entitled to the unclaimed stock or dividends so transferred.

There are many precedents for newspaper publicity, but only one need be quoted, namely, that the late Lord Redesdale's

Model Bill contains clauses providing for the advertising of unclaimed dividends on Corporation Stocks.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, SYDNEY H. PRESTON.

CAUTION TO EXHIBITORS AT THE MANCHESTER EXHIBITION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Great preparations are evidently being made to realise a substantial profit out of the exhibitors. We had occasion last week to send some things down to Manchester for the ventilation of the dining rooms, and were peremptorily ordered to remove the cases immediately from the grounds; and in order to effect this we engaged the services of the authorised agents to move them temporarily to a neighbouring warehouse. The actual value of this simple service would have been well covered by 2s. 6d. to 3s., instead of which we have been charged £2 5s., and we are refused delivery of the cases unless we pay this monstrous sum.—Yours, &c., Woodcock, S.C., District Superintendent of Police, Fyzabad, and Captain T. R. M. Macpherson, S.C., District Superintendent of Police, Kanara, have been allowed furlough for six, thirteen, and six months respectively.

By a recent India Army Circular, regiments of Native Infantry in Bengal and the Punjab Frontier Force were ordered to be raised to a strength of 912 per battalion, with effect from the 1st inst. The Commander-in-Chief has now notified in General Orders that Commanding Officers are at once to recruit up to the revised establishment, and that no men are to be passed to the reserve until the augmented strength is reached. The present strength of Native Infantry regiments, with the exception of the Goorkha battalions, is 832.

GENERAL LUCK, C.B., has left Sind to take up his new appointment as Inspector General of Cavalry in combination with the command of the Rawul Pindi Brigade.

GENERAL JOHN MURRAY, C.B., Commanding the Lahore Division, has made over his command to General Sir Hugh Gough, V.C.,

K.C.B. General Murray has greatly endeared himself to all under his command, as well as to his civilian friends; and his departure to England will be deeply and widely regretted. He was appointed to the Lahore Division in October, 1881; and it is not too much to say that Mian Mir has never said good bye to a more popular general. He first saw service in the Punjab campaign of 1848-49; and was present at many important actions during the Indian Mutiny. These include the actions of Shahgunj and at Mawn Singh's garden near Aligarh, when he was wounded; and the actions of Azra, Kutchla Ghat and Rolloonpore. Also took part in the operations in the Nepal Hills, and in the defeat of the Nusseerabad Brigade in the Goruckpore district. He was mentioned in despatches, three times, and received a brevet Majority. He also served in the Bhutan Campaign of 1865-66; and was made a C.B. His command of the Lahore Division has been marked by sound common sense, eminent professional ability, and extreme courtesy and kindness to all with whom he has come in contact, either officially or socially.

COLONEL T. H. WAY (M.S.C.) has, after a period of about twenty years, severed his connection with the Hyderabad Contingent Force, and has been appointed Brigadier General of the Ceded Districts, Madras Presidency. The gallant General entered the army in Her Majesty's 108th Foot on 12th December, 1851, and the Staff Corps in October, 1867. For some time he commanded a company of Sappers and Miners, and then entered the H.C. service, and after a period of over thirty-two years' service in the army was appointed commandant of the 4th Infantry H.C., his juniors in the Madras army having obtained their commandantship long before him. For about three months General Way officiated at Bolarum as Brigadier-General of the H.C. Troops, but had to relinquish the command and join his regiment (3rd Infantry H.C.) in September last for Upper Burma. That country was not new to him, as he had served under General Godwin in the 2nd Burmese war of 1852-53, and received a medal. During his tenure of Command of the H.C. Force, the then Resident noticed the great tact and abilities of General Way, and on his departure caused a most eulogistic order to be promulgated. His severance from the Contingent Service is very much regretted by all.

Lieut. Hickey, Madras Staff Corps.

THE Commander-in-Chief, says the Englishman, has found it necessary to direct that the Imperial Assemblage Commemorative Medal is not to be worn by officers or soldiers of the British Army, nor is it to be worn by Native officers and soldiers on parade. On occasions of State ceremony, of a civil character only, the medal may be worn by Native officers and soldiers.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MEMOIR OF MAJOR-GENERAL J. T. BOILEAU, R.E., F.R.S.*

When Prince Talleyrand was asked, at the Congress of Vienna, to point out the British representative, he indicated a quiet-looking gentleman in plain morning costume. "Impossible," said his interlocutor, "he is not even decorated!" "Ma foi," rejoined Talleyrand, cynically regarding the be-starred and be-ribboned assemblage, "ma foi, c'est bien distingué."

Some similar observation may well occur to the mind in contemplating the career of the officially "undecorated," but in every way remarkable man, whose memoir lies before us. The scion of a Huguenot, and, both before and since its settlement in England, an essentially military family, John Theophilus Boileau showed in early years the thoroughness and the unlimited power of grasping detail which characterised him through life. He was, to use an Anglo-Indicism, emphatically a "pukka" man, hating shams, and mercilessly exposing them.

"Burra Baloo," as the Natives, by a pardonable corruption of his name, used to call him, was, by the accidents of service, denied the opportunity of distinction in the field, but his versatility enabled him to shine in almost every other sphere. He was a good musician, his ear being so accurate that he could tune a piano; an astronomer of marked, and widely recognised, ability; and he was familiar with the colloquial idioms of India to an extent given to few; speaking, according to one Native chief, "better Hindustani than any Englishman he (the Rajah) ever met" (p. 56).

In his own special department as an Engineer officer Boileau was eminently successful; the buildings erected by him seem built for all time.

"Sie stehn, wie für die Ewigkeit gebaut."

Indeed, the solidity of his buildings brought him into frequent collision with the Military Board. Of this curious Board, which then governed the Public Works Department, and the ruling spirit of which was Colonel Galloway (afterwards Sir Archibald Galloway, and a Director of the East India Company), a fair idea may be formed from their complaining that Boileau's besetting sin was (p. 22) "to attend more to the quality of his work than to its cheapness (!)," and he was on one occasion actually fined Rs. 30,000 for having, by that amount, exceeded his estimates for a church and college then under construction. No wonder that Sir Charles Napier, when Commander-in-Chief, could say to a friend: "Give my love to Boileau; he hates the Military Board as much as I do!"

Colonel Boileau, after having rendered to the Government yeoman's service in every capacity in which he had been employed, quitted, just before the mutinies of 1857, a country, on the soil of which he had left many an enduring mark. Henceforth he is best known as having consecrated his energies and his rare business abilities to charitable uses. His useful work in the municipal bodies of which he was a member is not to be overlooked, but, like his brother "Sapper," Gordon, he will be affectionately remembered in connection with his efforts on behalf of the young, especially of the orphans of his own profession. The present flourishing condition of the Schools for Daughters of officers and of soldiers may fairly be said to be all but wholly due to him.

Mr. Low has done well in availing himself of his privilege as a relative, and of his recognised position as a littérateur, to place before the many friends of the late General, and before the public, this interesting record of an eminently useful, distinguished, and blameless, career.

WILLIAM THE THIRD.†

Few periods of English History have been more discussed than the period of the Revolution, or, as Mr. Torriano styles it, the "Restitution," of 1688. Every possible view of the momentous political change which then took place has been ably urged. While Macaulay's romance-like History has William III. for its hero, others, maintaining an old-world belief in the Divine right of kings, look on the Prince of Orange and his successors as mere usurpers. Of these was the brilliant authoress of the "Lives of the Queens of England," who, as the writer of the present notice can testify, never would kneel while the Prayers for the Queen and Royal Family were read in church.

The opinions of the author of the work before us are, to say the least, clearly stated. His trumpet gives no uncertain sound. He is a "Protestant" quand même. He "finds at present enough to endure in the sight of monks and nuns and priests and Jesuits, and of croching Romanism within and without our own Church. Signs," he assures us, "indicate the arrival in London of a Popish Nuncio or Legate." In order to cultivate in the rising generation a robust Protestantism prepared to confront the realization of such gloomy prognostications of evil, Mr. Torriano has written, from the point of view above indicated, an excellent guide to the events of the entire period. His arrangement is admirable, and well worthy imitation. In Part I. he gives in adequate detail, extending over 184 closely-printed pages, his "Chronological Narrative." Part II. is devoted to the many important matters which would break the continuity of that narrative. Campaigns, battles by sea and land, sieges, plots, and conspiracies are in turn the subject of careful and discriminating investigation, the excursus on the Glencoe massacre being especially worthy of commendation.

The book will be found extremely valuable to the student; and it would be yet more so if in a second edition (which will certainly be called for) a fuller Index were added. Take, for instance, the famous conspiracy of Sir John Fenwick. It figures in the table of Contents of the Chronological Narrative (chap. xiii.), but is not noticed in the Index. Nor would any one looking at either Contents or Index be aware that a very full and lucid account of it is to be found at p. 244. It may be laid down as a general rule that the index to any work on historical subjects cannot easily be too copious. We think, too, that "2 Mac, 187, 195" (p. 33) is a somewhat perplexing way of quoting the second volume of "Macaulay's History." These, however, are but minor blemishes in a book, the general conception and arrangement of which entitle its author to high praise.

JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.*

This number of the Asiatic Society's Journal opens with the Rev. S. Beal's paper of "Remarks on the Narrative of Fabien," the celebrated Buddhist pilgrim, which contains many matters of interest. The traveller's account of the dimensions of the figure of Maitreya set up in the kingdom of Tali-lo, or Dardistan, hitherto unintelligible because misunderstood, is, for instance, made clear by a reference to the almost identical dimensions of the statue erected by Nebuchadnezzar as given in the third chapter of the prophet Daniel. The well-known story in the "Arabian Nights" of the nation whose custom required a man to be buried with his deceased wife is paralleled by the account given by Procopius (Chap. III.) of a custom prevalent among the Ephthalites (J.R.A.S., p. 201). There is, too, a legend, absurd enough on the face of it, as to the origin of the Cinghalese (or, more properly, Singhalese) from the cohabitation of a lion and a captive woman of India—a tradition which is intelligible enough when we are reminded (p. 206) that "the Vajjians who invaded India at an early date were called lions."

The carefully written, and to Sinologists, important, article on Chinese labials by the Rev. J. Edkins, of Peking, the characters illustrating which deserve, as does the Paper itself, high commendation, is followed by one by Mr. H. Cunyngame on the "Present State of Education in Egypt." In education, as in other Egyptian matters, European intervention is far from being an unmixed advantage. The writer wisely lays stress (p. 236) on the utter neglect of means to preserve the Native style of art; which, whether in architecture or design, is, owing not to want of Native ability, but solely to want of encouragement, dying out. Have we not, we may ask, much to answer for, in this respect, in India? Taking architecture only, how many designs of truly Native character does the Government sanction in the course of a year, or of a decade?

In a well thought-out notice on the Triratna, Mr. F. Pinnett has once more displayed his exceptional faculty for approaching hitherto unsolved difficulties from a fresh side; nothing can be simpler than his demonstration—for such it seems to us to be—that this mysterious symbol is nothing but the first letter of "Ye Dharma, the Shibboleth of Buddhism; the expression of the four truths, the perfect exposition of the faith" (p. 242).

Mr. L'Estrange's revised translation of Jalal, or Shams-ed-din es Suyute's description of the Noble Sanctuary at Jerusalem, as it stood in A.D. 1470, is confined to the headings of the chapters, and to the correct rendering of the more important passages in the text. The translator has enhanced the value of his work by adding to it a plan of the Haram Ash Sharif as now existing, and by copious explanatory notes.

We are glad to see the Royal Asiatic Society again insisting (pp. 343-9) on the utter disproportion between the vast objects aimed at in pursuing Oriental studies and the insignificance of the means adopted by us in order to the attainment of those objects. It is only by keeping this important matter constantly before the literary world that any improvement can be hoped for.

LEAVES FROM MEMORY'S LOG BOOK.†

There is an attraction about sailors' yarns which seldom fails to please. An "old salt" has seen so much of the world, has visited so many climes and sailed in such a variety of unknown waters, that there is always something to be gathered from the experiences of a sailor. "Leaves from Memory's Log Book" is no exception to the rule. There is an endless variety of experiences, the chit-chat is attractive, and the simplicity of style and unaffected plainness of speech inspire confidence at the outset, so that when the time comes to take leave there is a feeling of regret at the departure of a cheery friend and an intelligent comrade. And, withal, there are some funny tales and strange conceits in the volume in question. Who would credit that but a few years since not only was cannibalism practised in New Zealand, but some fiends calling themselves women existed who on one occasion made an incision in the heart of a captive and sucked his life's blood through the orifice!

"Shaving made easy" would scarcely be patronised by the mashers of Bond-street and the "Row." Here is the receipt. "They sharpen the edges of the shells, put one part under the hair, and with the other saw away at it till it is cut through, and in this wonderful way they shave nearly as well as we do with a sharp razor to help us."

How do birds exist in the middle of the ocean 800 miles from land? Where do they build their nests? How do they roost? Upon what do they feed? Why do they never tire, but fly about day by day without a moment's respite? These are questions which "no fellow can understand." Once again, why do "negresses" always wear white at a ball, and repay any attention shown to them with the plain reward of a kiss?

For simplicity and fulness of meaning it would be difficult to match the sailor's description of a dinner as an attempt to catch a feller by the belly.

A marriage in full uniform seems a mighty attractive ceremony in the West Indies, to judge from the crowd which always accompanies the happy pair, filling not only every nook and corner of the church, but even clambering up the sides of the pulpit. Then fancy 800lbs. of wedding cake and 200 pairs of gloves as a distribution amongst the assembled multitude!

A description of an ugly man as a person who had murdered a monkey and stolen his face is most exquisitely "too-too." But what about travellers' lies? Can it be credited that there is a spot in India which has not been blessed with rain for eighty-seven years? This wants a deal of believing. And it needs, too, rather a strong digestion to swallow the fact that a buck used to be found in the neighbourhood of Quebec measuring 17 feet in height!

Enough has been said to indicate that "Leaves from Memory's Log Book" is eminently readable. We ourselves have derived much pleasure at odd half-hours in company with the "Ancient Mariner," who narrates his experiences plainly, humorously—in a word, like a sailor to whom the ocean is a home and the deep the love of his soul, and we are persuaded others will share our delight.

It is difficult, nay, it is altogether hopeless, to attempt to convey by language any idea of the exquisite beauty of the "Art Journal." We have now before us the issues for the current year. Let us glance at their merits, taking first the large full-page plates, of which each number contains one. There are two etchings, one engraving, and a "process" reproduction, all excellent, artistic, and interesting. Then there are some sweet scenes from Scotland's hills to illustrate an account of "Sir Walter Scott's country." "A Foreign Artist and Author in England" introduces the American system of illustration, of which the effect is distinctly peculiar; but in any case the variety cannot be otherwise than pleasing. As to minor pictures, caricatures, portraits, and the suchlike, they are too numerous to mention; while lest aught should be wanting to complete the "menu," the letterpress is in every way worthy of the illustrations, and all told the cost is 1s. 6d. Can enterprise go beyond this?

RUSSIA AND INDIA.

SCARES are now the order of the day. A report that there is a rising amongst some tribes in Afghanistan is at present considered of sufficiently alarming significance to affect prices on the London Stock Exchange! Folly could hardly go much further, but the fact remains. It is the old story of Russophobia again. There is a limit to the knowledge possessed by the Bulls and Bears of the Stock Exchange of anything connected with India geographically or politically, but there is no limit to the evil working of the ignorance which is at the root of the scares which arise in the temple of Finance. Afghan gentlemen have from the earliest times been of a restless disposition and given to cutting each other's throats. This was their pleasure and vocation ages ago and is so still, but nobody formerly was troubled in mind to find a reason for Afghan idiosyncracies; to-day, however, no petty disturbance can occur in that country without some wiseacre rushing to the conclusion that Russia is at the bottom of the mischief, with the object of preparing her way for the immediate invasion of India. This invasion of India seems to have been accepted by certain alarmist writers as one of the most practical and easiest things imaginable, and so the British public is continually being instructed as to how England must meet the threatened danger. The writers take rather a pessimist view of the position, so far as England is concerned. And they accordingly advise all manner of precautions. One of the latest of these recommendations is a renewal of the old suggestion that Persia should be secured by England as an ally. The Pioneer, a journal supposed to possess a certain semi-official position with the Government of India, has, we regret to say, lent its columns to advocate this weak and, we had thought, worn-out idea. We are told that in the supposed coming struggle with Russia for our Indian Empire the co-operation of Persia must be secured as being essential to the success of our arms! It is difficult to understand how any writer can hold such an opinion and be credited with sanity. If the success of our arms against a Russian invasion of India depends upon an alliance with Persia the sooner we make a present of India to Russia, and so avoid waste of blood and treasure, the better. It is satisfactory, however, to find that there is at least one Anglo-Indian journal which does not accept the view of the Pioneer. The Civil and Military Gazette considers that view to be a "monstrous" theory, and wisely says that the despatch of any mission to the Court of the Shah, as recommended by the Pioneer, would be the extreme of folly. If ever there was a day when such a course was advisable it is now too late. We cannot put back the clock, and Persia to-day is at the mercy of Russia. But as the frontier journal says: "It is not by the despatch of inopportune missions, or by secret alliances with Asiatic despots, that we shall counteract and thwart Russian designs, but by steadily preparing for the struggle, and by binding more closely to us the subject populations of India. Every penny spent on Persia, either in missions or subsidies, is money wasted. When we have beaten Russia in the field, even though that field may be within sight of the Indus, we may trust to the Persians becoming our allies fast enough, but till then let us spend our money in improving and increasing our army, in frontier defences, and good military communications. This dependence on alliances 'as essential to the success of our arms' is puerile, and unworthy of a great nation. We can beat Russia single-handed; and most assuredly we shall, for we alone can stand the strain of several campaigns. It is not to be supposed that a nation like Russia, seething with disaffection, and enfeebled by corruption, can ever triumph over a united and vigorous nation like Great Britain, so long as that nation is true to itself and confident in its own might and the justice of its cause."

We are glad to find the Lahore journal, which has made this question of a Russian advance on India a special study, holding such views to-day instead of the Russophobic alarm shrieks which at one time appeared in its columns from the brilliant pen of a gallant Colonel who was always prophesying disasters to England from "Shadows in the East." We should be sorry to think that the views expressed in the Pioneer, recommending a Mission to the Court of the Shah of Persia, are the views of Lord Dufferin, however much that ably conducted journal may be in the confidence of the Government of India. If we cannot hold India against any invader without seeking for outside alliances, Persian or Afghan, we have no right to hold it at all. If Russia makes the attempt to wrest India from England, Englishmen to-day need have no fear of what the issue will be. It is cowardly, it is treasonable even, to hold a doubt upon the subject. Let it be granted that a great Russian army has conquered all obstacles which can bar its advance to the Indus—what then? The shock of battle would have to be met, but before the onset of British troops, backed by the gallant Native soldiery and the loyal feudatories of our Indian Empire, the legions of the Czar would be defeated and destroyed.

IN MEMORIAM.—CHARLES C. PRINSEP.

For some months since it was felt that Mr. Campbell Prinsep, of the India Office, was failing in health. True, the fine handsome frame bore its years well; true, few would have thought that it carried the burden of more than sixty summers. But signs and symptoms were not wanting that Time had made inroads upon a constitution never, perhaps, any too strong, and to those who knew how much the steps to his room tried Mr. Prinsep, it was evident that things were not what they should have been in the matter of health. In spite of all this, the blow which carried away this honest and honoured public servant came with alarming suddenness. One day he was deliberating as to his return to his duties, the next—the interval was but a few hours—his place was destined to know him no more. Well may the moralist preach the warning, "in the midst of life we are in death."

Belonging to "the Prinseps" of India, an appointment in the House in Leadenhall-street fell, as a matter of course, to the member of the family who wanted to follow an official career. So, in 1850, Campbell Prinsep joined the staff where his uncle, the well-known "Thoby," was one of the twenty-four directors who controlled the destinies of nations, and in whose hands were the fate of countless peoples; merchants in name, but monarchs in deed. Of the years passed amidst the usual routine—we had almost written drudgery—of a Government office, it is not necessary to speak. Mr. Prinsep did his work, and did it conscientiously. It will suffice to refer to his services in the capacity of Statistical Reporter to the Secretary of State for India. In criticising his discharge of the duties which devolved upon him in this sphere, it should not be overlooked that staticians are of two kinds—those who deduce theories and propound doctrines based upon the facts which they have collected, and the figures which they have compiled, and those who content themselves with mere compilations, leaving others to utilise the information thus ready at their hand. Mr. Campbell Prinsep belonged to the latter class. He did not conceive it within his province to weary himself and possibly his readers with elaborate deductions or far-fetched theories. Enough for him that his figures would stand the test of examination. To the judgment of some he carried this indifference perhaps somewhat too far; for possessed, as he undoubtedly was, of an enormous, in some respects an unrivalled, accumulation of information, he might, had he chosen, have propounded theories which, even if unsound, could not have been called in question save by those as well informed as himself, and these were few. But it may be doubted whether he did not do well to leave to others a task which would have brought him within the vortex of controversy, and possibly exposed him to misunderstanding.

That good work was done by the Statistical Reporter is evidenced by the annual statistical abstracts, the value of which it is impossible to overrate; they are a perfect mine of information; while the papers recently prepared by Mr. Prinsep for the Currency Commission now sitting are likely to be of the greatest use, we have reason to believe, in the discussion of the most intricate and perplexing question which forms the subject of deliberation. It would be easy to name other instances of conscientious and trustworthy labour, but enough has been said to indicate that work need not be blazoned abroad to be sound, or worthless because it is not paraded with a flourish of trumpets.

As a much-esteemed member of the India Office Establishment Mr. Prinsep's memory will not soon fade. Courteous, genial, kind, absolutely without an enemy, his death has removed a link between the past, with its "John Company," and the present, with its "Queen-Empress." The tribute of the living may be plain, simple, and unimpassioned, but it is sincere—the tribute of affection and esteem.

THE Punjab Government Gazette contains a notification expressing the regret of the Lieutenant-Governor at the death of the Rajah of Jhind. "The late Rajah," says the notification, "succeeded to the Chiefship in March, 1864, and had scarcely taken his seat on the gaddi when a rebellion broke out in the newly-acquired territory of Dadri to test his energy and determination. Declining all assistance from the British Government or from the States of Patiala and Nabha, which was willingly offered, he speedily reduced the insurgents to subjection, and was as merciful after his success as he had been energetic in action. During the Afghan campaign of 1878-80, the late Raja placed his forces at the disposal of the British Government, and furnished a contingent which was employed in keeping the communications. The late Raja administered his State firmly and efficiently, and showed himself a faithful and loyal adherent of the British Government, and a wise Councillor in matters relating to the minorities in Patiala and Nabha, on which his advice was frequently sought by the Lieutenant-Governor. Sir Charles Aitchison has lost in the Raja an old and valued friend, and offers his sincerest condolence to the family of his Highness in their bereavement, and to the Jhind State, which has been deprived of its distinguished ruler.

A NATIVE gentleman writes to a Calcutta paper to complain of the growing avarice of bridegrooms in Bengal. Their exactions, he says, are perceptibly increasing, and the evil custom is bringing ruin and misery into many families, even among the well-to-do classes. The price of the bridegroom increases in proportion to the success he achieves at the University. A boy who has passed the entrance examination is now worth Rs. 300, while B.As. and M.As. are worth much more.

THE CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON, AND CHINA.

The twenty-ninth annual general meeting of the shareholders of this bank was held on the 19th inst., at the Banking House, Old Broad-street, Mr. J. N. Bullen presiding.

The Secretary having read the notice convening the meeting, the report was taken as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts (which were given in our last issue), said as regarded the balance-sheet there was not much in the figures that needed special explanation. The deposits remained very much as they were in June. There was some increase in those repayable on demand; but, on the other hand, there was some falling off in those for fixed periods, owing to the reduction in the rate of interest, and as the reduction continued there would probably be a further falling off. The note circulation had again increased, and stood at a very satisfactory level. On the other side of the account the Government stocks showed an increase. That increase was made in the summer of last year, when they were over-supplied with money, which, owing to the low rates of interest then prevailing, could not be employed to advantage. At the time of the closing of the accounts on Dec. 31, owing to the Bank rate having been raised to 5 per cent. and to the political uneasiness which prevailed, there was a fall in the value of their stocks, and in consequence they had to write off about £9,000 for reduction in value; but those stocks were not sold, and the market for such securities having since recovered, probably the whole or nearly the whole of that £9,000 would be recouped. The profit and loss account, it must be admitted, did not show satisfactory results, partly owing to their having had to write off £9,000 on account of the depreciation in their securities, but mainly owing to the unprofitable working of the exchange operations at some of their branches. No doubt there had been errors of judgment; but considering the wild fluctuations in the exchanges during the last half year, errors were not surprising. Those fluctuations were between 42d. and 46d., and the Council bills fluctuated between 1s. 4 3-16d. and 1s. 5 3-4d., equal in both cases to about 9 per cent. As regarded the general business of the bank there was nothing in it to cause anxiety. Provision had been made for all bad and doubtful debts, and so far as the directors knew no bad debts of any moment were impending. It was no doubt unsatisfactory to have had to take £25,000 from the reserve fund to meet the losses; but from 1883 to 1885 £105,000 was added to that fund out of profits. In concluding, he maintained that it was desirable to keep the capital abroad, where it was employed profitably.

The motion having been seconded by Mr. Murray Robertson, a director, a brief discussion arose, in the course of which several shareholders expressed their regret at the unsatisfactory results of the bank's operations. Complaint was also made that neither the accounts nor the chairman's speech fully revealed the position of the bank, the actual facts being that no profit had been made during the past year, and in addition to the £25,000 withdrawn from reserve, an additional sum of £25,000 carried forward from the previous accounts had also been absorbed. Questions were asked as to the amount of bad debts incurring, whether proper supervision was exercised over the managers of the branches in the East, and whether these gentlemen had in any way exceeded the powers entrusted to them.

In replying the Chairman stated that the losses from bad debts in the last half-year did not exceed £4,500 or 15,000. The unsatisfactory results of operations were, as he had already stated, due solely to exceptional causes, viz., the depreciation in the value of silver and the fluctuations in exchange. With the prospect of a large increase in exports from India he, the Chairman, entertained no doubt of a speedy improvement in commercial affairs generally. It would be impossible for the directors to control every detail of the operations conducted by the managers of the various branches, but proper supervision was exercised over their proceedings. The Chairman concluded by saying that he and his brother directors had drawn but one-half the fees to which they were entitled, and speaking for himself he would say that the sum they received was no adequate compensation for the trouble and anxiety involved in administering the affairs of the Bank.

The motion for the adoption of the report, including the declaration of a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, having been carried, Mr. George Yule, of London and Calcutta, was elected to fill the vacancy on the board caused by the resignation of Mr. William Scott owing to ill-health, and the retiring directors having been re-elected, the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman and the directors.

THE CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.

The thirty-third ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this bank was held on Wednesday, the 20th inst., at the Cannon-street Hotel; Mr. William Paterson in the chair.

From the report it appeared that the net profits for the year, together with £7,933 16s. 11d. brought forward, amounted to £79,124 12s. 8d. After providing for bad and doubtful debts, and deducting the interim dividend paid in October last, the present balance was £34,740 17s. 10d., out of which the directors proposed to declare a dividend for the second half of the year at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, leaving a sum of £6,740 17s. 10d. to be carried forward.

In moving the adoption of the report, the Chairman paid a tribute to the memory of their late director, Mr. Ludwig Wiese, stating that it was with feelings of very deep regret that he had to commence the proceedings by mentioning the sad loss the bank had sustained in the death of that gentleman, who could not fail to be valued in any circle, and whose great experience and sound judgment had been most highly appreciated at the board of this bank, with the welfare and interests of which he had thoroughly identified himself during the past sixteen years. The Chairman then stated that business generally, as they were aware, during the past year had not been going on more satisfactorily than in several previous years. He was sorry to say their troubles with the currency question had not been materially lightened, although they had at great loss and sacrifice placed in their books in sterling the capital employed at their agencies. While such uncertainty existed as regarded the relative value of gold and silver, the shareholders would readily understand that the only prudent course for the bank to pursue was to keep its silver engagements within as narrow a compass as possible consistent with the requirements of its branches; and under such harassing circumstances the shareholders would at once admit that the result of the year's operations was most creditable to their chief manager and to their local managers generally. The system of forward contracts for bills had always been looked upon with aversion by the board, and he could only say they had done everything in their power to discourage it. It was very trying for their managers, both at home and abroad, to be dealing in silver and at the same time to have to be considering what its probable value would be in gold. The Parliamentary inquiry into the subject did not seem to have made much progress yet towards a settlement of the question; but he saw by the papers that morning that a new chairman had been elected, a most able man, and he trusted the proceedings of the Commission would be expedited. The uncertain and unsettled state of affairs existing proved prejudicial not only in connection with India, but also as regarded the trade of this country with other silver-using nations, which, taken collectively, embraced a very large share of the total exports and imports, not to mention the investments in railways, loans, and other undertakings of various descriptions and of enormous extent. He did not think it was necessary for him to make any remarks upon the accounts, which were made up as usual at the current exchange and actual prices of the day.

The motion for the adoption of the report having been seconded by Mr. William Macnaughtan, who congratulated the shareholders on the successful result of the past year's operations, which he thought highly creditable to their managers, it was carried unanimously.

Mr. Drake, one of the shareholders, also expressed the satisfaction they must all feel at the result which had been produced in the face of the great difficulty of the silver question, and which they could only attribute it to the care and caution exercised by their esteemed manager, Mr. Gwyther, and the staff both at home and abroad.

The resolution for payment of the dividend was then carried, and the remaining business of the meeting concluded with a hearty vote of thanks to the directors and staff, which was acknowledged by the chairman and manager, the latter stating that without bimetalism the trade of England with silver-using countries could never be profitable and peaceful.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA (LIMITED).

The ordinary general meeting of the shareholders in this bank was held at the Cannon-street Hotel on the 22nd inst. Mr. R. O. Campbell presided.

In moving the adoption of the report and accounts the Chairman said they showed a gross profit of £75,693. This was scarcely as good a result as the directors expected; but towards the close of last year there was a sudden rise in the rates of discount in this country, which had of course affected to a considerable extent their six months' bill remittances; and he thought they had good ground for congratulation in the fact that in a year of so much difficulty they had been able, after making adequate provision for bad and doubtful debts, to pay their usual dividend of 5 per cent. per annum, to add to the reserve fund £10,000, and to carry forward to the present year upwards of £5,000. The difficulties which in these days attended Indian exchange banking were known to them all. There was the unprecedented fall in the value of silver, the keen competition for business in India, and also the risks attending forward contracts in exchange business, into which they were almost forced by the modern practice of merchants in making their business arrangements. These causes had all been in active operation during the past year. They began the year with silver at 46½d. per oz.; in August it was 42d.—a fall of 10·16 per cent. Telegraphic transfers were sold by the Government at the beginning of the year at 1s. 6 1-16d. per rupee; in August the price had fallen to 1s. 4½d.—a fall of 10 per cent. Four-and-a-half per cent. rupee paper was quoted in January last year at 74; in August it was 68½—a fall of 7 per cent. The Commission on Silver was to resume its sittings next week, under the Presidency of Lord Herschell, and he hoped it would tend to clear up some of the much-debated questions as to the practicability, and, if practicable, the advantage, of adopting the theory of bi-metallism. Mr. Baker, their senior manager in India, had recently made a tour of inspection among the branches; and his reports, which were very carefully prepared, and entered into every matter that should engage the attention of an inspector, had been of great value to the directors, and were very encouraging. There were no serious losses to record. Their business had been steadily progressive; their resources had been well and profitably employed; and they had in their general manager, Mr. Robert Campbell, a gentleman who possessed in a high degree every qualification which was required in one who discharged the onerous, delicate, and responsible duties of that position. The reserve fund stood in the accounts at £60,000, and if the report were adopted it would be increased to £70,000. There had been some increase in their Government rupee securities and in their sterling loans, but that was entirely accidental. The increase in the former arose from the fact that they were used for exchange purposes and belonged entirely to their branches, and that in the latter from the fact that a large sum which was sold last year at a good profit appeared as being held on December 31, it having since been delivered, the contract not being fulfilled till the present year.

Mr. John Borradaile seconded the adoption of the report, which included the declaration of the dividend at 5 per cent., which was agreed to unanimously.

The nomination of Mr. James Murdoch (of Messrs. W. Moran and Co., Calcutta) to fill the vacancy on the board caused by the death of Mr. A. B. Inglis was confirmed, and the retiring directors re-elected, the proceedings terminated with votes of thanks to the general manager and the other officers of the bank and the directors.

LOSS OF THE P. AND O. STEAMER "TASMANIA."

The P. and O. steamer Tasmania, from Bombay to Marseilles and London, which sailed from Port Said on the 12th inst., and was due to arrive at Marseilles on the 20th, stranded on the night of the 17th on the Monachi Rocks, a group of islets surrounded by reefs extending over a space of nearly two miles, immediately off the south coast of Corsica, and on the north-east shore of the Straits of Bonifacio. The captain, two of the officers, and twenty-two of the Lascar stokers lost their lives. Of the passengers, seventy-four women and children were safely conveyed to shore in one of the Tasmania's boats. The remainder passed the night on the stern of the Tasmania, the only part of the vessel not submerged, and next morning an English and a French yacht began the work of rescuing the shipwrecked people, who were taken to Ajaccio, where the authorities placed the Lazaretto and Civil Hospital at their disposal. It is remarkable that the loss of the Tasmania was immediately followed by another disaster. The French yacht Magali, returning from the regatta at Nice, was run into and sunk by the P. and O. steamer Chusan, which was on its way to Ajaccio to take on board the shipwrecked passengers and crew of the Tasmania. The yacht was completely cut in two. The captain and two of her crew of eight men were drowned. The Chusan picked up the survivors, and subsequently transferred them to the mail steamer Amazon, bound for Marseilles. The passengers and the survivors of the crew of the Tasmania reached Marseilles on board the Chusan on the 21st inst. Subjoined is a list of the passengers for London:—The Earl of Buckinghamshire, Col. and Mrs. Ostrehan and child and infant, Miss Ostrehan, Mrs. and Miss M'Ivor, Mr. D. M. Lister, Mr. H. Rustomjee, Mr. J. Coles, Mr. O. Oertel, Mr. R. H. Rustomjee, Mr. B. H. Rustomjee, Mr. Duff Bruce, Mr. J. A. Bridges, Mr. H. N. Harris, Mr. E. B. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. G. Wilds and three children, Dr. Roughton, Mr. Griffiths, Mr. Ross, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Woodhouse, Miss French, Captain Eyre, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Chope and child, Mr. R. H. Strong, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Cole, child, and two infants, Captain Yate, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Story and infant, Mr. Pilkington, Rev. J. H. Mackay. The following, who had booked for Marseilles, were also on board:—Sir H. Edward and Lady Bradford and two children, Mr. and Mrs. Pigott, Mr. and Mrs. Browne, Mr. and Mrs. Vowell and child, Sir Bradford Leslie and two children, Mr. A. Macdonald, Mr. Hadenfeldt, Mr. Bernhard, Mrs. Llewellyn, Mrs. Adams, Mr. Crawford, Mr. J. W. Grant, Major Cameron, Mrs. Truman, Mrs. Langley, Miss Langley, General W. Goodfellow, Lieutenant-Colonel Poole, Brigade-Surgeon George S. Sutherland, Mr. L. E. D. Rose, Mr. A. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. V. Pont and two children, Mr. Ryder, Mrs. Neill, Mr. and Mrs. Allen and child Mr. E. Gallois, Mrs. Westland, and Mrs. Butts and infant.

The Tasmania was a comparatively new vessel, having been launched at Greenock three years ago. She was a screw steamship, built of steel and of 4,488 tons gross, 400ft. long, 45ft. beam, and 28ft. deep. She left Bombay about three weeks ago, and was advertised to sail from the Albert Docks, London, on her return trip to the Mediterranean, Aden, Bombay, &c., on May 12. The Tasmania carried a crew of about 160 Lascars, and was commanded by Captain Perrins. It appears that the captain was killed by the fall of a mast, and the other two officers lost were washed away by a wave. The value of the cargo on board is estimated at £76,800.

A passenger on board the Tasmania gives the following account of the disaster:—I was lying awake in my berth when the vessel went with full force on the rocks. When I arrived on deck I found they were lowering the boats on the starboard side. There was a heavy sea and a cold biting wind. Out of eight boats only four were launched successfully, the others being smashed by the waves. All the ladies on board came on deck, partially clothed; but everybody was admirably composed, and there was no shrieking or confusion. The women were placed on the bridge, and remained there quietly awaiting orders, though they were constantly drenched by the waves, which washed clean over the vessel. At nine A.M. all the women and children had left the vessel, with two exceptions—viz., Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Piggott, who refused to leave their husbands. The boats left and reached the shore safely. The passengers, after walking for some hours over rocks and scrub, found refuge in a farmhouse. Nothing could exceed the kindness with which they were treated by the country people, who placed all they had at their disposal, and gave up their rooms, cloths, and all they possessed, for the comfort of the shipwrecked people. They were sent in carts to Propiano, and thence to Ajaccio, where they found the Chusan. After the departure of the women the storm increased to such a degree that it would have been impossible to launch anything in the way of boats. The officers and crew, with the assistance of the passengers, proceeded to make rafts out of spars, &c. One was launched and lashed alongside. The second was just finished when a sea washed it overboard. Meanwhile the native firemen took possession of the second raft, and in defiance of the commands of the chief officer cut the rope and made for the shore, where they arrived with eight dead from exposure. Then the captain in making an attempt to procure the ship's papers from the chart-room was struck and knocked over by the wreckage. He was lying on his back, and cried out, "For God's sake, take this thing off my chest." Major Cooper, aide-de-camp of the Viceroy, the chief officer, and one of the stewards rushed to help him, but were too late, for a heavy sea broke over the vessel and washed him, feet forward, towards the fore part of the steamer, which was completely submerged, and he was never seen again. By this time all of us were numbed with cold, and exhausted, and the passengers and crew congregated in the stern, which was elevated, and in the smoking-room, and some sought refuge in the rigging, where several perished from cold, and the rest were obliged to descend. We expected the vessel to break up every instant, and plunge us into eternity. The smoking-room, in spite of the windows being knocked out, was suffocating from the number of people crowded in it. It resembled the Black Hole of Calcutta. There were seventy people in a cabin twelve feet by sixteen feet. Besides this, the floor was covered with pieces of broken glass, and the poor Lascars were lying about everywhere. The wind continued until eleven P.M., and the sea was still high at twelve. Eighteen Lascars died of exposure during the night.

INDIAN PRO-CONSULS.—The Sind Times thinks it would be of incalculable advantage to the interests of the Empire if the three Lieutenant-Governorships in India could be filled up in the same way as the Governorships of Madras and Bombay. The paper says:—"If the large numbers of Madras and Bombay civilians are content with getting all but the two highest offices, the Bengal and Punjab civilians cannot complain of any special hardship if they cease to be generally eligible for Lieutenant-Governorships."

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE'S STATUE.—On March 31st his Excellency the Governor unveiled the statue of Sir Richard Temple, late Governor of Bombay, which has been placed in position on the Esplanade opposite the Public Works offices. At a public meeting of the inhabitants of Bombay held in the Town Hall on the 12th March, 1880, under the presidency of Sir Michael Westropp, then Chief Justice, it was resolved, on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Justice Bayley, to raise funds by subscription for a statue of Sir Richard Temple to be placed in some conspicuous part of the city. Mr. Charles Douglas and Mr. Dosabhoj Framjee, C.S.I., were appointed secretaries to the committee entrusted with carrying the resolution into effect. The funds subscribed amounted in all to Rs. 18,000. The statue has been made by Mr. B. Brock, the well-known sculptor, who is now engaged upon a statue of the late Sir Bartle Frere. On the departure of Sir Michael Westropp, the Hon. Mr. Justice Bayley was appointed, and has ever since continued to be chairman of the committee. The statue was received in Bombay some six months ago, and has been erected, at the cost of the subscribers, by Khan Bahadur M. C. Munzban, Executive Engineer at the Presidency. It will be enclosed by an ornamental iron railing. At the ceremony Mr. Justice Bayley, as chairman of the committee, briefly stated the circumstances under which the statue was voted to Sir Richard Temple, his Excellency the Governor then performed the unveiling ceremony.

BROAD ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Government, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng and regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

TO THE HOLDERS OF INDIA £4 PER CENT. STOCK, & INDIA £4 PER CENT. STOCK CERTIFICATES.

INDIA OFFICE, 19th April, 1887.

The Secretary of State for India in Council hereby gives notice that, with reference to the India £4 per Cent. Stock and India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates becoming redeemable at par on or after the 10th October, 1888, as specified in the Advertisements under which the Stock and Stock Certificates have been issued, he is willing to grant a like amount of India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock and India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock Certificates respectively, in exchange for such India £4 per Cent. Stock and India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates.

The holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates, who avail themselves of this offer, will receive on the 6th July, 1887, a payment of £1 12s. 6d. per Cent. on the amount of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates surrendered, being a quarter's interest at £4 per Cent. per annum to that date, and ten shillings per Cent. per annum for a year and a quarter to October, 1888, paid in advance; and subsequently Interest will be due quarterly on the 5th October, 5th January, 5th April, and 5th July in each year, at the rate of £3 10s. per Cent. per annum.

The Stock and Stock Certificates granted in exchange will be consolidated with the India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock now existing, which is not redeemable until the 5th January, 1931, but will be redeemable at par on or after that day, upon one year's previous notice having been given in The London Gazette by the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The Books of the Stock are kept at the Bank of England, where all Assignments and Transfers are made. All Transfers and Stock Certificates are free of Stamp Duty.

The same facilities are given in respect of this Stock for the transmission of dividend warrants by post, and for the exchange of Stock into Stock Certificates with coupons annexed payable to bearer, as are given in the case of Consols and India Four and Three per Cent. Stocks. Trustees are empowered to invest Trust Funds in this Stock, unless expressly forbidden by the Instrument creating the Trust.

The holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates, who may desire to convert their Stock or Certificates upon the terms above-mentioned, are hereby required to signify their assent to the Secretary of State for India in Council, in a form to be obtained at the Chief Accountant's Office at the Bank of England; and such assents must be delivered at the Chief Accountant's Office at the Bank of England on or before Wednesday the 1st June, 1887. From the time of the delivery of such assents the holders of the India £4 per Cent. Stock thereby affected will be precluded from dealing with their respective shares of that Stock; but on the 8th June, or, in the case of assents sent in on or before the 28th May, or the 2nd June, their share of India £4 per Cent. having been cancelled, corresponding amounts of India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock will be inscribed in their names, and may from that date be dealt in. The assents of holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates must be accompanied by the Stock Certificates therein referred to, for which a receipt will be given, that will be exchangeable for the new India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock Certificates after the expiration of seven days from the date of surrender.

In the case of Stock transferable at the Bank of Ireland, and of Certificates issued in respect thereof, the forms must be obtained from the Accountant-General's Office at the Bank of Ireland, and the assents must be delivered at that Office on or before the 1st June, 1887, as aforesaid.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying chemical analysis), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This assertion is necessary, as many persons have been purchasers by false representations.

See The Times, July 15th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

From SYMES & CO., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of the efficacy of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera, Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is. 1gd., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 15th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 13th April; and from Calcutta to the 12th April.

THE situation in Afghanistan is serious. The insurrection of the Ghilzais is spreading, and the Ameer is reported to be alarmed at the dimensions it is assuming. Some of the reports that have reached India, however, are greatly exaggerated.

THE Hotak Ghilzais have attacked and killed the Governor of Maruf, who was on his way to assist the Kandahar troops in dispersing the insurgents.

THE Ghilzais in the Ghazni district are reported to have offered the throne to a local Mullah, who refused it on religious grounds, but advised them to make Mir Alam Khan, who headed the rebellion last year, the Ghilzai Ameer.

COMMUNICATION has been re-established between Kandahar and Cabul.

COLONEL MIRZA ATAULLAH KHAN, our Envoy at Cabul, who was on short leave in India, has now started to rejoin his post. He had an interview with the Viceroy at Saharanpur before leaving for Peshawur.

THE VICEROY'S plans are changed. He will now remain till the 23rd of this month at Dehra, whence he has made an excursion to Mussoorie. He will also probably pay a visit to Hurdwar.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has completed his tour of frontier inspection, and is now on the way to Simla.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT are now at Mahabeshwar. At Panchguni, a few days ago, a smart shower of hailstones fell. Some of the stones are said to have been as large as pigeons' eggs.

THE GAEKWAR OF BARODA, having returned from Ceylon, has gone to Mahabeshwar. It is probable that he will visit England soon.

MR. J. B. PEILE, C.S.I., who officiated as Member of Council during Sir Stuart Bayley's absence, will again take over charge of the Home Office portfolio on the 9th instant, consequent on Sir Charles Aitchison leaving for England.

SIR CHARLES ARBUTHNOT expects to leave Burma for India early in May.

A HURRICANE swept over Bhamo on the 4th inst., destroying the European barracks. One man was killed and several injured.

AN affray has occurred at Mandalay between some of the Munster Fusiliers and several men of the Somersetshire Regiment. The former fired their rifles, but without doing any damage. A court-martial will be held.

By the bombardment of Zanzibar the British Indian subjects have suffered very greatly, both physically and in estate. The merchants with their families escaped into the bush, where they had to take shelter for five days. They then marched to a neighbouring station, subsisting for several days on roots and plants.

THE annual pig-sticking meet in Guzerat has just come to an end. The Guzerat Cup has this year been won by Colonel Bulkeley, of the 17th Bombay Infantry, on Templar. The Pony Cup was won by Dr. E. Tully, who had a bad fall—presumably after taking his spear.

A PARTY of Japanese commercial men, charged by the merchants of Hiogo to inquire into the workings of Indian Chambers of Commerce, visited Calcutta this week.

MR. E. C. K. OLLIPHANT has been re-appointed Municipal Commissioner of Bombay, but goes home almost immediately for nine months and a-half, during which time Mr. Charles, C.S., will act.

THE publication of the reports respecting a prospective change in the Indian transport system has produced an official statement to the effect that no fundamental alteration is contemplated.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL CAMPBELL STEWART, Madras Cavalry, who lately commanded a column in Upper Burma, has assumed command of the Hyderabad Contingent force.

THE last draft from England for the 2nd Battalion Royal Warwickshire Regiment has been sent to Pachmarhi depot for the hot season as an experimental measure.

A PETITION with a view to securing improved accommodation on the Bombay Tramways has been presented to H.E. the Governor.

RECENT researches in Java have proved the presence of petroleum there.

THE question of the construction of a line of railway connecting the Rajputana State line with Hyderabad and Karachi via Umarnkot is being agitated.

Notes of the Week.

THE state of affairs in Afghanistan still disturbs the serenity of the London Press critics, whose sublime ignorance of anything connected with Afghanistan is amusing as well as appalling. Curious comments are being made upon an extraordinary telegram from Calcutta, stating that, in case the present Ameer of Afghanistan is defeated and dethroned by the rebellious tribes now in arms against him, measures will be taken by England and Russia to place a ruler in that country who will be in the confidence of these two great Powers.

FARCE could hardly go further. It is within the limits of possibility that Afghanistan may in time become altogether under British or Russian influence, but a joint occupation of Afghanistan by Russia and England, or under a chief appointed by them, is too much of a joke, especially if it is to be accepted as a fact that Russia is determined within measurable time to try and wrest the Empire of India from us.

As this determination of Russia is now a settled belief amongst English critics who write on Afghan and Indian affairs, it surely might be well to stop the further continuance of the farce of the Afghanistan Boundary Commission. To be disputing about settling a matter of boundary pillars which nobody has the slightest intention of regarding in case of war complications is too ridiculous. The farce of the Boundary Commission ought to be put a stop to at once. It has hitherto done no good, and is not likely to do so now.

THE authority of the Ameer Abdul Rahman has not, says the Pioneer, apparently been completely set at naught in Eastern Afghanistan, though the Ghilzais have ventured on skirmishing with his troops. Communication between Cabul and Kandahar has been re-established, showing that the main points on the route are still held by the Ameer's officials. Kelat-i-Ghilzai has hitherto been garrisoned by kasidars, poorly armed irregular levies, but the Ameer is likely to send regular troops there. The Ameer is still at Cabul according to the latest news received at Peshawur, and it is not known whether he will lead his troops personally. Last year, it may be remembered, his commander-in-chief, Gholam Hyder, suppressed the Andari revolt near Ghazni without the least difficulty.

It is reported that the Maharajah Pertab Singh, Prime Minister of Jodhpur, visits England at the special invitation of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. He has taken with him the old and precious stones which Akbar, Alungeer, Jehangeer, and Aurungzebe presented to Ajeet Singh, and the valuables looted at the fall of Ahmedabad. The aggregate worth of the whole is about twelve lakhs of rupees.

A LETTER relating to Tantia Bheel, the notorious dacoit, which recently appeared in the Indian Mirror, is attracting considerable attention. The writer of the letter, who signs himself "A Non-Official European," says:—

Tantia Bheel is the one romantic character left in India, and where would be the poetry of the Central Provinces without its Rob Boy. Tania Bheel was a model zemindar, a good citizen, and an upright man, till he was driven to the woods and forests by official oppression. You, no doubt, have heard of "Naboth's Vineyard." Well, Tania Bheel's was a very similar case. If you had ever experienced official oppression, as I have, you too would sympathise with Tania Bheel as I do, with my whole heart, with my whole soul, and with all my strength. Tania Bheel is the most popular man in the Central Provinces, the uncrowned king of the peasantry. Not a man of a populace would betray him for love or fear of anything whatsoever, nor for bags of gold. He never oppresses the poor, honest, labouring man, but, on the contrary, assists such with the wealth he annexes from the undeserving rich. The only people that hate and fear him are oppressive and unjust officials, tyrannical and rapacious landlords, and miserly and usurious bunniahs.

In commenting upon this letter the Indian Daily News says that it has been told that "Tantia is neither a Bheel, nor an aggrieved landed proprietor, but an old rebel, and it is said that, with a view to bring him to justice, a certain Native suggested to the Government that some steps might be taken for that purpose."

THE announcement that the Maharaja Scindhia has invested part of the hoardings of that State in British securities is being very favourably commented upon throughout the Native and Anglo-Indian Press. It is said to argue well for Native belief in the stability of English rule. But instead of a joint occupation of Afghanistan by England and Russia—as some critics propose—a happier idea has been raised, namely, that a little gentle pressure should be put on the present Ameer to induce him, by the promise of 4 per cent., to invest a few crores of his money in India when it is thought that we should then have no further anxiety about our North-West Frontier. The chief difficulty, however, in carrying his Highness to adopt this happy consummation might be the smallness of the interest. As he is possibly at the present moment screwing 400 per cent. out of his subjects, in the way of taxation and octroi duties, 4 per cent. from the British Government might not seem to him an over-attractive investment for his spare capital.

MADRAS, says the Pioneer, is indeed happy in its now Governor Mr. Bourke, as we recently stated, has achieved extraordinary popularity among the not too susceptible Madrasians. His kindness and geniality recall the virtues of his brother, Lord Mayo, and have won the hearts of Europeans and Natives alike. Owing to the death of Lady Margaret Bourke and the disastrous fire in the People's Park, no large entertainments took place at Government House in the early part of January, but in February and March they were most frequent and most popular. Not only at the public breakfasts, a good old Madras custom which he has revived, but on all occasions has the Governor been accessible to the Madras public, whose social and other institutions have found in him a sympathetic adviser, a willing speaker, and an interested patron. The influence Mr. Bourke established so shortly after his arrival enabled him to bring about an entente cordiale between different classes in the Presidency town, which gives every promise of being strengthened and maintained, and the great success of the Jubilee celebration throughout the length and breadth of the Presidency, was chiefly due to the personal intervention which such a position rendered possible. It is commonly remarked in Madras that Mr. Bourke must have determined, if energy can do it, to remove from the Province committed to his charge the name sometimes applied to it of the "Benighted." In all his efforts, too, he is being ably seconded by Lady Susan Bourke, whose unaffected kindness and sympathetic interest in local society and its institutions have, as our Madras correspondent recently said, endeared her to all classes of the people.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 1.

Since the Public Service Commission separated, nearly two months ago, a sub-committee has been sitting, first at Calcutta, afterwards at Allahabad and Lahore, and has collected a great mass of evidence on various subjects, such as whether engineers trained at Roorkee are fit for the higher appointments in the Public Works Department, whether Natives are competent to take charge of forests, the grievances of telegraph officials, and so on. The committee has now proceeded to Simla, where it will be engaged for some time in inquiring into certain Imperial departments, as well as in arranging and digesting the evidence already taken. When the rains set in, this committee will probably visit Nagpore, Bombay, and Madras. The entire Commission will reassemble here in November to prepare its report, which it is hoped will be ready for submission by the end of the year. The Commission will have no easy task, as the opinions of witnesses are very conflicting, and many of them are wild in the extreme. It is probably a safe prophecy that no very startling changes will result from the inquiry.

It is stated, apparently correctly, that the report of the late Finance Commission contained some remarkable revelations regarding the allowances to clerks accompanying the Government to Simla. Those allowances appear to have been granted on no fixed principle. In many cases they equal, and in some greatly exceed, the clerk's annual salary. It is understood that the Supreme Government is now engaged in considering the subject, and although no change will be made this year, it is probable that orders will be issued for putting the matter on a more satisfactory footing before next summer.

In this connection it may be mentioned that the local newspapers have published a summary of the despatch of the Indian Government to the Secretary of State on the "hill exodus" question. The Government says it is not specially attached to Simla or to any other hill station, but thinks that, if it is to be located in the plains during the summer, Calcutta is an unsuitable place, owing to the distance of the town from the north-west frontier, its unhealthy climate, and the danger of the Government falling under Bengalee influences. It would prefer a new situation, such as Poonah. Formerly, it remarks, when Calcutta was the permanent head-quarters, the Viceroy used to make long tours during which business was brought practically to a standstill—a state of things which is no longer possible. Moreover, the removal to a new locality would necessitate the abandonment of the costly public offices lately erected at Simla. As regards the isolation of Simla the despatch says that the Supreme Government is not brought into direct contact with the people, but is a supervising and controlling agency. It is finally suggested that a permanent location in the plains might deter statesmen of the first rank from accepting the office of Viceroy.

The Native political agitators appear to be concentrating their energies on one point of their programme, namely, representative government for India. Hardly a day passes on which their organs do not contain reports of meetings held in various more or less obscure country towns and villages; and the resolutions passed at those meetings bear so marked a resemblance to one another as at once to suggest the inference that they were drafted by the same hand and issued from one central office. They all concluded with a prayer that Her Majesty will be pleased to commemorate her Jubilee by granting representative institutions to India. The leaders of this movement evidently fail to perceive that they are taking the very best means to show their unfitness for the boon which they seek. If they were content to proceed slowly they might make out a very fair case for gradual additions to the number of elected members in the various Legislative Councils; but to say that India is now fit for a full measure of popular government shows either recklessness or profound ignorance of the country.

The committee established in Bombay to conduct the defence of Rukhmabai has determined to await the decision of the High Court on her appeal before proceeding to memorialise the Government. Meanwhile, it continues to collect subscriptions, which, however, do not appear to be flowing in very fast. The Native newspapers have now begun to take more notice of the case. The great majority, even of those which profess to represent educated and advanced Native opinion, show themselves adverse to Rukhmabai.

Madras seems determined to lose no opportunity of displaying its loyalty. Not content with the Jubilee celebrations of February, it is now organising a second celebration for the 20th of June, when the new Town-hall will be opened, and a series of festivities will be held.

It is stated that thirteen Native cavalry officers, selected from the three Presidencies, will go to England, under the command of a British officer of Native Cavalry, to represent the Indian army at the Jubilee. The Maharajah Holkar left Bombay on Friday, and will probably be in England during the Jubilee rejoicings.

The Calcutta Englishman states that the Government has arranged a scheme for the complete and systematic botanical survey of India. The country will be divided into four divisions, the first under Mr. Duthie, superintendent of the Government Botanical Gardens at Saharunpore, the second under Surgeon-Major King, superintendent of the Royal Botanical Gardens at Calcutta, and the third and fourth under the Madras and Bombay Government botanists respectively. The scheme is said to have been suggested by the Kew authorities.

EDUCATION OF THE RAJA CLASS.

(Englishman.)

The article by the Raja Oday Pertap Singh, Taluqdar of Bhinga, in the Calcutta Review, is of some importance at the present moment. The writer is a member of a class which still retains great influence over the masses, and in times of upheaval and confusion this influence would become even more powerful. His estimate as given before the Provincial Education Commission, of which he was a member, is as follows:—"The Raja caste, uncultivated as it is, has yet an immense influence for good or evil in the land." The Raja divides the people of India roughly into five classes:—The ruling princes, the aristocracy, the middle classes, the teeming millions, and the clamorous agitators. He advocates the education of the higher classes, not to the exclusion of the education of the lower, but as a necessary preliminary to it; he does not maintain that the educational efforts of the Government should be limited to the few, but urges that is an inversion of the proper order to educate the lower and neglect the upper. It is a matter of regret that so little has been done hitherto in this direction. Instead of beginning at the upper strata of society and allowing the new ideas to filter downwards to the base as would seem rational, we have begun by remodelling and undermining the lower strata; and it is not unreasonable to fear that a catastrophe, a kind of social landslip, will be the result. There can be no greater delusion than that of commencing with the education of the lower classes, and then, as it is triumphantly rather than conclusively called, building from the foundation upwards. All experience is against this charmingly logical method. Enlist the sympathy of the richer and leisure classes; this will do more than anything else to ensure the spread of sound ideas. This natural fall of education has been fitly likened to that of the gentle rain from heaven, striking first the thirsty hill tops, and then, with gathered force and fertilising power, descending into the lowly valleys. The Raja quotes a speech of Sir Alfred Lyall's, in which his Honour complains that the landed gentry have not availed themselves freely of the opportunities offered them for the education of their sons in the schools initiated and controlled by Government. To this he replies: "I put it to Sir Alfred Lyall or any other English gentleman whether he would be willing to see his own son sitting at school between the sons of his menial servants." . . . The line of action has been clearly indicated: dictum sapientissimum: and it is now for the taluqdars to bestir themselves and settle the details. It only remains for the taluqdars to bring themselves abreast of the age. The income of one of the best and most advanced colleges in the province comes mainly, as Sir Alfred Lyall reminds them, from the very considerable assignment made by the taluqdars themselves. Let them combine in their own interests, act on the English adage "charity begins at home," and the difficulty will soon be solved. Success in the education of these landed and leisure classes should mean their closer union with us in the Government of the country, and also a closer social intimacy.

PAPAL POWER IN INDIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

It has been more than once noted as curious that in India alone has the establishment of an Indian Roman Catholic hierarchy, and the consolidation of Papal supremacy throughout the Empire been watched with unconcern. The previous establishment of a similar hierarchy in England raised a "No Popery" storm, of which the force is not yet entirely spent. But in India such religious differences carry little weight. A conspicuously small, ruling Christian race, in the midst of a vast Hindu and Mussalman population, has too many urgent matters of fact to face, to concern itself with the arguments of schoolmen. But on the continent and, we may feel sure, especially in Italy, the Roman Catholic hierarchy in India is regarded as a pregnant fact, full of possible consequences in history. A contemporary noticed recently how, when the Queen's Jubilee and the visit of the apostolic delegate to the capital of an Indian province occurred almost simultaneously—the Roman Catholic inhabitants illuminated their buildings ten times more brilliantly for the latter event; and the French papers would not fail to welcome such action, as proof of the correctness of their theory, that Papal supremacy has supplanted the authority of the Crown to a large extent in India. Only through blissful ignorance of this country could such views be held. Still it must not be concealed that the temporal power of the Pope, in East as in West, is by no means the faded shadow of recent years. Prince Bismarck, who humbled France, has ended the Kulturkampf—that struggle with the Vatican on which he had often staked his power—in ignominious surrender; and in China the Pope has successfully thrown off the patronage of France. What wonder if French or German critics should see in the honours about to be conferred on Monsignor Agliardi only another proof that the Pope has also triumphed over Protestant England?

A BUDGET ESTIMATE.

(Pioneer.)

Don't knight him yet! He read it through
From end to end and back again—
He was the only person who Could stand beneath the fearful strain;
And this, so far as he discerns,
Is what the Indian Public learns:—

THE SURPLUS.

"Cheer up, my fellow countrymen!"
Writes C.-l.-n of the Silver Pen,
"If Two and Two were always Four
We might a Deficit deplore;
But since, with some success, I strive
To write them down, at least, for Five,
I may assert with modest pride
We have a Surplus on our side.

ITS MANUFACTURE.

Still, entre nous, I quite admit
The suit financial does not fit.
But if I shear the pants away
And use them for the waistcoat, say;
Or, Decency forbidding, deck
With coat-tail ends your tattered neck,
Or stitch across your manly breast
Some trifling fragments from the vest;
Or deftly take the seat to trim
Your wideawake's much-fingered brim
[I trust I make my meaning clear]
That snit will serve another year,
Nay, further—as my Statement shows—
Leave wherewithal to wipe your nose.

THE EXPLANATION.

A certain widely-spread desire
To, reverently of course, inquire Into that wild and whirling dance
Which vulgar herds have dubbed "Finance,"
Is not unnatural, and I
Will meet your curiosity.
Intelligence like yours will seize
At once such patent facts as these
The Estimated Surplus lies
Co-ordinate with my Revise.
The Budget Estimate, you see,
Makes up the working Trinity.
Whereas—the simplest mind may judge it—
Deductions from the Previous Budget
Bring, ipso facto, in their train
The Surplus Estimates again.
But next year's Surplus keeps in view
The Deficit of '82,
Which, when transferred to Loan Account,
Links on the last Revised amount
For Sterling Loans which, per se, range
In inverse ratio to Exchange,
And, ex necessitate, call For next year's Budget Scheme. That's all.

THE CONCLUSION.

N.B.—I merely pause to mention
I haven't got the chee—intention
To raise your Income-Tax, as yet.
The fish may wait for next year's net.
Meantime, accept five hundred quid
On paper. Pay as you are bid.
Don't mind the scrappy, patchy dressing—
It looks all right in front. My blessing
And this advice;—abstain from solvin'
The ways and works of

Yours, A. C.—L.V.—N."

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS IN INDIA.

(Railway Service Gazette.)

The return of railway accidents in India for the third quarter of 1886 rather dissipates the idea that mishaps are few and far between in this country. Altogether there were 678 accidents of various descriptions in the three months, the numbers being slightly below that for the corresponding period of the previous year. The East India shows a decrease of 18, the Rajputana-Malwa of 22, the Southern-Mahratta of 15, the Great Indian Peninsula of 26, and the Bengal and North-Western of 21. On the other hand, there were 16 more accidents on the Jorhat, 12 on the Madras, 20 on the Oudh and Rohilkhand, which is not perhaps to be wondered at, and 20 on the Assam. Cattle seem to have been responsible for a considerable proportion of the total casualties. On the Madras Railway there were 19 accidents owing to animals wandering on the line, on the Oudh and Rohilkhand 39, on the G.I.P. 8, on the Rajputana-Malwa 43, or 15·69 1 per cent. of the total of 274, and on the Bengal and North-Western 6. The number of cases in which passenger trains or parts of them left the rails decreased from 30 to 21, or by nine, owing, it is noticed, to there having been no mishaps under this head on the Bengal and North-Western and Eastern Bengal Railways, against nine and three respectively in the corresponding quarter of 1886. In the number of cases in which goods trains, parts of them, or engines left the rails, there was, however, an increase from 58 to 84, nine more accidents of this kind occurring on the North-Western Railway, six more on the Cawnpore-Achnera State Railway, seven more on the Jorhat State Railway, and eleven more on the Assam Railway. It is noteworthy that during the quarter under review not a single casualty of this description occurred on the Bengal and North-Western line, although there were 14 in the corresponding three months of the previous year. There were 19 cases of the bursting of tubes of engines, 61 of the failure of machinery and springs of engines, and 36 of the failure of couplings. The number of cases of flooding of portions of the permanent way was largest on the G.I.P., which returned eight out of a total of 31. Under this head there was a decrease on the Rajputana-Malwa and North-Western from 13 to 9 and 4 to 7 respectively. The cases of slips in cuttings or embankments show the satisfactory decrease of 17 to 3, owing chiefly to no accidents of this description occurring on the East Indian Railway. The cases of fire in trains were most numerous on the North-Western, the number being 13, or 65·00 of the total, but as compared with the corresponding previous quarter there was a decrease of four on the line, and the total for all India shows a decrease of twelve.

Coming to casualties to passengers and others, we find that 111 persons were killed and 202 injured through causes connected with the working of trains. Sixteen more are reported to have been killed and 49 injured in yards and workshops, and 130 to have met their deaths in carriages and at stations from causes unconnected with the working of trains. From causes beyond their own control, one passenger was killed and ten injured, whilst from misconduct or want of caution seven were killed and 36 injured. Among servants, the numbers were 3 and 18 and 41 and 115 respectively. Two persons were killed and two injured whilst passing at level crossings, and 49 were killed and 17 injured while trespassing on the line. Six people committed suicide, and two more were killed and four injured from miscellaneous causes.

(Pioneer.)

The Hindu lady, Rukhmibai, has refused to live with a man she loathes, merely because as a child she went through an absurd and unintelligible ceremonial, and for her courage she will have to go to prison if the judgment against her is upheld on appeal; but her case has at least made it clear that the law—if the judgment against her was legal—can scarcely be left in its present state. In the Government Resolution issued last October it was stated that the test applicable in a particular case, to determine whether Government interference was expedient or not, was the question: "Can the State give effect to its commands by the ordinary machinery at its disposal?" and this machinery was explained as working either negatively or positively. For instance, when caste or custom enjoins a practice involving a breach of the ordinary Criminal Law, the State will enforce the law; and when it enjoins a practice which is of its nature enforceable in the Civil Courts, but is clearly opposed to morality or public policy, the State will decline to enforce it. The Resolution has been condemned as being inadequate, because, had the Indian Government always followed the policy it formulates, suttee, which was not a breach of the Criminal Law before the days of Bentinck, would have been in vogue still. Even this extremely guarded policy, however, had it been liberally interpreted, ought to have saved Rukhmibai from her fate. If to force a woman to live with a man against her will, because she was made to go through a form she did not understand when a little girl, be not opposed to "morality and public policy," we do not know what is. The Government, nevertheless, have thought otherwise; they have not felt themselves compelled to interfere under the Resolution of October. The consequence is that the public voice is crying aloud for further action on the part of the Government, and even high officials are beginning to recognise openly that the cry must have a response. Speaking recently at Indore, Sir Lepel Griffin denounced the law that compelled Rukhmibai to go to prison, or to her so-called husband, as "a vile and shameful law," and went on to argue for reform on lines widely different from those laid down in the Government Resolution. The Indian Government have hitherto refused to recognise that Hindu marriage customs are on the same plane as suttee in respect of Government interference; but Sir Lepel and many of his audience distinctly implied that they are, and declared such interference to be absolutely necessary. Finally, he advocated the plan suggested by the Dewan Bahadur Raghunath Rao, to wit, the appointment of a Commission composed of people of all shades of opinion; on the report of which Government might redraft the Hindu law of marriage. No official of Sir Lepel Griffin's repute and standing has spoken so clearly and energetically upon the subject; the demand for a Commission might well be formally put before the Government.

"BOYCOTTING IN BOMBAY."

(Bombay Gazette.)

We have been favoured with a copy of a small pamphlet entitled "Boycotting in Bombay," in which the writer sets forth with pleasant banter the present position of importers of European piece-goods and the bazaar-dealers in them. It may be as well if we briefly explain the circumstances that led to this boycotting. Formerly it was the custom for each European importing-house to send their Native salesman daily to the bazaar to chat with dealers and to obtain what orders they could. In fact, many European assistants of import firms used to visit the bazaar several times weekly. Competition amongst importing houses was no doubt the origin of this system, and to the ordinary mind there would not appear to be any objection to it. Dealers were no more bound to give orders to salesmen in the bazaar than in the importers' offices in the Fort, and dealers might reasonably be supposed to be flattered by this attention and the saving of trouble to them. But the larger dealers seemed to think that their business suffered by the visits of salesmen, and the writer of the pamphlet explains it as follows:—"We Indian people are very polite, and when you and your salesmen used to sit at our shops you coaxed us overmuch. You pocketed our order, and multiplied them at the other shops. If we declined to give you our indents, you knew what prices we obtained, and got our neighbours to buy the same goods, and to make us opposition. When we, large dealers, gave orders for a hundred bales of a cloth, you doubled the dose by placing lots of five to ten bales with small dealers on the strength of our evidently doing well with a certain cloth. When goods arrived, we were all in the same bunder-boat, and pressure for sale by the little chaps in the bazaar, who cannot afford to hold goods long, spoiled our game." The writer then goes on to discuss the general conditions of business in Bombay. He very forcibly points out that the piece-goods bazaar owes its present prosperity entirely to the facilities with which Native dealers can trade. European houses buy, ship, and store the goods, giving the orderer every assistance and indulgence. Lakhs of rupees are thus locked up in goods in godowns, but they are European and not Native rupees. The larger dealers want to usurp the former position of European houses, and to take orders themselves from petty men. This would no doubt mean less competition and higher prices, and the consequence would be a serious shrinkage of the import trade of our port. In fact, merchants complain already that outside buyers are bundling themselves and their coin off to other trade centres, though the system of boycotting has only lasted about two and a-half months. The importer and the dealer are both middle-men, and the writer says the former objects to being dictated to by the latter. He then asks the pertinent question—Are you really strong enough to order us and our salesmen out of the bazaar? Have we no right to be there to see what you are doing with our capital? In Calcutta the Marwarrees are a great power, and do the bulk of the import business. Here they are practically boycotted, too, and goods have to reach the up-country markets by filtering through additional hands, thus increasing cost. We hear it rumoured that some large houses propose opening their own agencies in the larger up-country markets. It seems quite clear that the importing houses are much displeased with this boycotting of salesmen, and if persisted in, dealers may find to their cost that their last state is worse than their first.

A GOOD JUBILEE SUGGESTION.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We have celebrated the Jubilee by restoring to liberty a very large number of minor criminals, and by settling the little accounts of those who are for various reasons debarred from doing so for themselves. It has been suggested that the Jubilee might be brought more forcibly home to another and equally—perhaps more—interesting class, without any very great expense to Government, and by an act of tardy justice. The pay of officers of British regiments serving in India is made up of a certain very modest sum called, by courtesy, English pay, and other increments called Indian allowances. These latter are fixed at so many rupees; and since they are Indian allowances paid in India with Indian money, they are altogether outside the matter we wish to discuss. But English pay is fixed at so many pounds sterling; and whether the officer serving in this country wishes to spend this sum in England or in India, in neither case does he get his money's worth. Government, with a thoughtfulness which would be paternal were it not so appropriate, arrogates to itself the privilege of converting an officer's English pay into rupees on terms which are highly remunerative—to Government. Take the case of a Captain of a British Infantry Battalion. He can draw roughly, when soldiering at home, some £16 per month. Government sends him out to the gorgeous East, and promises to look after this little property for him. This it does by converting his £16 into rupees at the rate of two shillings and sixpence the rupee, or eight rupees for a sovereign; so that for sixteen sovereigns the unfortunate Captain receives Rs. 128! But this is only half the pious fraud. Supposing the Captain wishes to remit home a sum in rupees equivalent to £16, does he only pay Rs. 128? Nothing of the sort. Government permits him to do this at the rate of one shilling and sixpence the rupee. So that by the time an officer has received his English pay in India (which he is obliged to), and remitted it home again, it has cost him about one hundred rupees. Were a private business conducted on these terms, it would soon fall to pieces, as everyone of its clients would withdraw all support. Military men, however, cannot do this; and consequently the monstrous extortion is monthly perpetuated. The remedy is a very simple one, and while Government would undoubtedly lose much of the brilliant harvest it now reaps at the expense of its servants, still more money would probably be brought into and spent in the country. Let the English pay of officers serving in India be paid into the hands of the regimental agents, in order that officers may themselves be the gainers of the exchange on their own money should they wish to spend it in India; or may be saved from the double loss of the exchange, should they wish it to be expended by their families in England. Were so popular and urgent a reform carried out, we have no doubt whatever but that the officers of the army would, in their gratitude, subscribe very largely to the Imperial Institute. Who knows but that they might themselves take over and furnish a court in the Institute?

AN OUTLET FOR INDIAN TEA.

(Englishman.)

The yearly increasing outturn of Indian tea-gardens, and the growing pressure of new competitors, such as Ceylon, render it so extremely desirable to extend the demand for tea that it is satisfactory to learn that a promising proposal with that object is under the consideration of the Indian Tea Association. A South Sylhet planter, of many years' experience in this country and some knowledge of the trade at home, has submitted a scheme to the Association for promoting the sale of Indian teas in America and Canada, and the Association has referred the matter to the London secretary for his opinion, which, we trust, may be in its favour, as the scheme is deserving of every assistance. The promoter desires to stimulate the retail sale of Indian tea in the United States and Canada, by enabling consumers to buy direct from the producers, and so avoid the possibility of being deceived into buying a mixture of China tea as Indian manufacture. He undertakes to ship tea direct from Calcutta at his own risk and cost, and asks by way of financial support a subsidy from the Association for advertising purposes equal to half an anna per acre under tea. This sum would equal a contribution of Rs. 16 for a garden of 500 acres. The Association would have neither risk nor trouble; the advertisements, at a small cost to the industry, would keep Indian teas before public notice; and the consumer could rely upon getting the genuine article, and not a hybrid compound of unknown elements. The scheme is a decided move in the right direction, promising to open what is practically a new market for the retail sale of Indian teas, and the opportunity should not be missed by those whose interests are concerned. The South Sylhet Tea Association, we learn, are strongly in favour of the scheme, and the committee recently passed a resolution "recommending the proposal to all gardeners in this district and requesting our Honorary Secretary to communicate with the Honorary Secretary of the Indian Tea Association in Calcutta with reference to the support of other districts in carrying it out." The Committee further went on to say that "taking into consideration the low prices ruling for Indian tea in England, we are of opinion that the Indian Tea Association General Committee in Calcutta should be urged to take steps to open up new and promising markets such as was done with marked success in Australia four or five years ago. The monetary cost to the gardens will be small compared with the results obtained, and it is very necessary that some vigorous measures should be taken to check the downward tendency of the market value of the produce of our estates." The Calcutta Association, as we have stated, have given their support to the proposal. Should it be carried out and prove a success, then many others will no doubt be found ready and willing to follow in the footsteps of the promoter, and to join in the trade without asking for any help whatever from the Association.

BENGAL.

It is understood to be the intention of the Government of Bengal to convert fourteen of the present district jails into subsidiary jails; that is to say, to provide in them only for the temporary detention of prisoners sentenced in the district until they can be removed to other places of confinement. The measure, it is anticipated, will result in a considerable saving to Government.

The Cirencester scholarships, established by the Government of Bengal under Sir Ashley Eden, are to be discontinued temporarily. These scholarships since they were founded in 1881 have been awarded, two in each year, to distinguished Native graduates of the Calcutta University to undergo a training in agriculture at the Royal Agricultural College at Cirencester. Several of the earlier scholars have finished their course at the College, and have since returned to this country, and there are about five or six of them in the Government service now.

It is suggested by the British Indian Association that, with a view to affording both Native and European merchants of Calcutta a voice on the Port Trust Board, all merchants, who, as such, pay a municipal licence of Rs. 50 a year, shall be allowed, under such rules as Government may make in that behalf, to elect at least one-half of the total number of Commissioners of the Board, the European members voting for one moiety and the Native for the other. The votes, it is suggested, may be received at the Bengal office or the Chamber of Commerce, or such other agency or agencies as the Government may from time to time think fit, and a national Chamber of Commerce having lately been established by Native merchants, to it might fitly be entrusted the power of electing Native voters.

THERE are, if popular rumour be true, three competitors in the field for Sir Henry Harrison's appointment—Mr. Cotton, who has, apparently, the suffrages of the majority of the Municipal Commissioners; Mr. Grimley, whose long experience of Calcutta in all sorts of official capacities ought to stand him in good stead if the post is given to him; and Mr. Forbes, Magistrate and Collector of the 24-Parganas, who has gone through a good training for the position as Chairman of the Suburban Municipality, and has long been known as an able and energetic officer.

DURING the week ended the 2nd of April there were 229 deaths registered in Calcutta, giving a death-rate of 26·8 per thousand per annum. In the previous week there were 219 deaths, and the death-rate was 26·3 per thousand. There were no deaths from small-pox, 59 from cholera, 65 from fevers, 17 from tetanus, and 4 from causes not specified. The deaths are thus classified:—3 Non-Asiatics, 4 mixed Races, 146 Hindus, 69 Mohammedans, and 1 other Races. The Health Officer adds the following remarks:—The total number of deaths registered during the week ending 2nd of April was 223, against 219 and 202 in the two preceding weeks, and higher than the corresponding week of last year by 20. There were 59 deaths from cholera, against 52 and 46 in the two preceding weeks, the number is less than the average of the past quinquennium by 36. There were no deaths from small-pox during the week. The mortality from fevers and bowel complaints amounted to 65 and 15 respectively, against 58 and 13 in the preceding week. The general death-rate of the week was 26·8 per mille per annum, against 36·4, the mean of the last five years.

MADRAS.

THE town of Coonoor has long been in want of an efficient drainage system, and its deficiencies in this respect were lately the subject of severe criticism at the hands of the Sanitary Commissioner, but the impecunious condition of the Municipality has hitherto been an insurmountable barrier to the carrying out of the much-needed works. Some advance has, however, we hear, been now made in the matter, by the preparation of plans and estimates for a drainage scheme, which is estimated to cost Rs. 40,000, and which has received the approval of Government in the Public Works Department. The scheme provides for open street drains of stone laid in concrete, which will discharge into two covered sewers. These sewers will be connected by an iron pipe about fifty feet above the lower wooden bridge on the left bank of the Coonoor stream, and will then be continued by means of the pipe (to a point below the masonry bridge) across the Coonoor river, and there discharged. The difficulty with regard to the provision of the needed funds has, however, yet to be overcome. An application from the collector for a grant of half the amount, viz., Rs. 20,000, from Provincial Funds, on the grounds of the importance of the town of Coonoor as a sanitarium, has proved unsuccessful, as Government have expressed their inability, under present circumstances, to afford aid of any kind from Provincial Funds. They have, however, accorded sanction to the money required being raised by loan in the open market, and, if sufficient funds cannot be raised at once, the work might, they think, be carried out in sections.

THE marriage of his Highness the First Prince of Travancore was celebrated at his Highness's palace on Friday, the 18th ult., at 8 p.m., with great rejoicing. The bride belongs to the well-known family of Vakatakurupum, at Trishoor, celebrated for their beauty and other accomplishments. She is a girl of fifteen, and her choice has met with the approval of H.H. the Maharajah, H.H. the Senior Rane, C.I., and other chief members of the Royal family. A little before 8 p.m. the guests, who had been entertained at a sumptuous feast, and the palace priests, assembled in the hall of the palace. The ceremony opened with the Senior Rane presenting the bride with a beautiful lace cloth. The Prince took his seat on a white cloth spread over a handsome rich carpet to the right of his Royal aunt, when the bride was conducted to his presence by a near kinswoman of hers. With respectful obeisance the bride presented a silk cloth to her Highness the Senior Rane, and another to the Prince, and then stood before the Royal bridegroom. The Prince then gave her a rich Pithampar and a cloth. Thereupon one of the Kurupus in attendance placed upon her hands a big jug and a salver, and conferred upon her the title of Pana Pillay. Presents were next distributed to the officers of the Maharajah's Palace in attendance and Mr. Shungara Menon, B.A., brother of the newly-married Ammachee. There was afterwards a splendid display of fireworks, which attracted a large number of spectators. The whole ceremony was enlivened with music, both local and instrumental.

At meetings of the local Municipality and Local Board held at Umarnot, resolutions were passed, urging the construction of the proposed railway connecting the Rajpootana State line with Hyderabad and Kurrachee via Umarnot. Deputations of merchants from Mitte and Chachra, large towns in the desert, also waited on the Deputy Commissioner to urge the construction of the line.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

The annual examination of the Calcutta University, held at the various centres during the last fortnight, terminated on Thursday. In the Muir Central College building at Allahabad 169 candidates appeared for the Entrance Examination, 38 for the First Arts, and 102 for the B.A., the corresponding figures for last year being 124, 45, and 94 respectively. The total number of candidates examined at Allahabad was thus 309, an increase of 46 over the total of 1886. We understand that a grand total of about 6,000 candidates appeared at the various centres throughout Northern India and Bengal for the Entrance Examination alone of the Calcutta University, and about 2,500 for the First Arts. To the Allahabad paper, these numbers afford another reason, if one were needed, in favour of the opening as quickly as possible of the University of the North-West Provinces recently sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

A WELL attended meeting was held at Lahore on April 5, for the purpose of raising a memorial to Sir Charles Aitchison. The chair was taken by Colonel Sir William Davies. It was unanimously resolved to invite subscriptions throughout the Punjab and India generally for the purchase of a marble bust and portrait. It is anticipated that a large fund will be raised amongst Sir Charles's friends all over India. Subscriptions are being received at all their branches by the Bank of Bengal and the Alliance bank of Simla.—Pioneer.

A MIAN MIR correspondent writes to the Lahore paper on Thursday:—"An account of General Murray's official departure from Mian Mir on Saturday last is rather late; but his many friends elsewhere would like to know how cordial was the farewell of the men who have served under him. A number of non-commissioned officers and men of the Northumberland Fusiliers met his carriage at the gate of his house, unfastened the horses, and, in relays, dragged the carriage all the way to Mian Mir East Railway Station, a distance of 2½ miles! There all the bands, ladies, and gentlemen, and a number of the troops and their families were assembled to say 'God-speed.' At Lahore the volunteers formed a guard-of-honour on the railway platform. Everything, in fact, that this garrison could do to show honour and respect to their old General was done. When 'Tommies' of their own accord and without prompting from any one calmly start to drag a carriage a distance of two miles and three-quarters at four o'clock on an April afternoon in India, and do it, their hearts must be in the job, we may be sure. We may be equally sure, for we know it, that General Murray honestly deserved the tribute of admiration paid him."

An exchange of battalions has been arranged between Majors Denison and Kay of the Leinster Regiment.

Official correspondence ranging from July, 1885, to the 9th ult. on the subject of Pondoland is published. Certain of the despatches deal with the steps taken for the annexation of the Xesibe country on the recommendation of the Cape Government, the approval of the Queen to which was telegraphed to Lieut. Torrens, the Acting High Commissioner at the Cape, on May 18 last. The letters patent were transmitted on August 30. Other correspondence deals with the subsequent difficulties with the Pondos, and the efforts made for a settlement of the questions at issue between the chief (Umquikela) of that country and the Cape Government. Ultimately Umquikela conceded to the Colonial Government the right to construct and maintain the road through Eastern Pondoland to the mouth of the St. John's River, with outspans and grazing rights and free use of road. He concedes for ever to the Colonial Government that portion of his territory called the Rode, with the right to govern the same. He renounces all claim to the territories of the St. John's River and Xesibeland. The Colonial Government reciprocates the several stipulations, and agrees to pay in consideration thereof the sum of £1,600 and an annuity of £200 to Umquikela and his heirs. Sir Hercules Robinson was instructed on Jan. 21 last to confirm the agreement.

SUBALTERNS AFLOAT.

"Sindbad the Sailor" tells a Bombay paper at some length how forty subalterns behaved on a P. and O. steamer:—

I have just arrived in Bombay after an exciting and interesting voyage on board the mail-steamer Hyderabad. It was the happiness of that steamer at Suez to receive a company of forty or more young officers from on board the P. and O. mail-steamer Nankin, into which they had overflowed from one of Her Majesty's transports that, big as it was, could not possibly hold them. The forty young officers, whose age averaged, judging from appearances, the vigorous and hungry 19, took command of the ship, and with youth at the prow, and pleasure at the helm, we came along gloriously. All the pedantic rules and regulations which afflict life on board a P. and O. steamer on ordinary occasions were promptly set aside. We smoked where and when we liked, in our own cabins, in the saloon, down by the keel, and up on the tree-top. When ladies were present, we paid them the compliment of treating them on those terms of equality which the sex has of late years rightly claimed. We smoked and we laughed, we joked and we sung, and added considerably to their knowledge of life.

The steamer being blessed with the presence on board of a young and charming bride, we held a public meeting to consider how best to commemorate her recent marriage, this being the Jubilee year. A sub-committee was appointed to compose the address, which, with the help of a dictionary and a book of poems, was achieved very successfully. When all was ready, a deputation, which included nearly the whole body of these young men, waited upon the bride, the chairman of the committee being escorted on either hand by stalwart ensigns, bearing flags. The address was read, and without waiting for a reply, the testimonial was without much ceremony produced. With a provident regard for future exigencies, the testimonial was neither diamond brooch, nor ring, nor pearl, bouquet nor smelling-bottle, but a pair of lovely little baby's boots! A base rascal suggested that they were stolen property, purloined from an anxious mother who formed part of the ship's original company of passengers, but a calumny of this kind carries with it its own refutation. More to my purpose is it to chronicle the surprise and evident pleasure of the recipient of this well-selected and suggestive gift; a pleasure which she in vain strove to conceal under an appearance of confusion and consternation, and a simulated desire that the deck might open beneath her feet, and allow her to sink gently into the kindly waves.

All the ladies on board were not—sad to say—brides on their honeymoon, or even tender mothers of babies with superfluous pairs of ribboned boots. Amongst many—it is not altogether perhaps to be wondered at, however it may be regretted—that one lady was found to object to smoking in the saloon. She not only looked disapproval, but gave her opinion that it might be convenient if the practice were discontinued. Now, this was a most impolitic proceeding, for it gave rise most naturally to the idea that there was a base subservience to the Captain's view, that the absurd rule prohibiting smoking abaft the funnel was worth the paint with which it was made visible. The lady was immediately assumed to be an incarnation of the Queen-Empress, with an indisputable right to order everything according to her sovereign will and pleasure. She was renamed Queen Victoria, and in the evening, or, not to put too fine a point on it, in the night, after she had retired to her cabin, she was serenaded, "God save the Queen" being shouted, with variations and additions, which attested the loyalty and the lungs of the improvised choir.

It is right to say that music throughout the voyage was the strong point of our new and genial friends. Concerts were given, such as Wagner never conceived when dreaming of the music of the future. They were instrumental concerts as a rule, though not invariably, and a feature of every performance was that no two voices and no two instruments were in one key. It was indeed a case of a bunch of keys, and this added marvellously to the general effect.

A pandemonium concert, during the whole of which I was present, for I was unable to swim, and was afraid to leave the ship, was the most rousing thing I ever heard in my life. There were banjos and kettles, belaying pins and tables, hands clapping, and heels kicking, jackals howling, and hyenas laughing, all celebrating the glorious drawing of a brother officer who had given to his barrack-companions the unexpiable insult of an inoffensive life.

Sir Roger de Coverley, danced on the deck to appropriate song, was a sweet boon. The fun was the greater when—an unfeeling officer of the ship having interfered to mar the amusement—it was resumed at eleven o'clock at night when, everybody being asleep, no one could be disturbed by the light fantastic toe. And at every pause in the dance was about to begin, not the toe only but the whole foot, or indeed the whole forty feet and a few extra—coming down as one on the resounding boards made amends to the sleepers for the absence of a big drum from the list of the vessel's fittings.

The Captain of the Hyderabad, I am sorry to say, took a somewhat prosaic view of all these joyous proceedings. He stuck up, as captains will, for the discipline of the ship. But he soon found that he was wasting his valuable time, and getting himself into hot water. He overlooked the fact that, when he indiscreetly spoke of reporting infractions of rule, he was himself at the mercy of reprisals. It is not every ship's stores which can stand the severe test of forty stomach-power applied by a number of commissioned officers, fresh from school and college, whose appetites have been whetted by sea air. A report was drawn up and signed by 43 names, complaining of the bad food, bad cookery, and the general inefficiency of the arrangements for the comfort of youthful manhood on board the Hyderabad. This document was duly presented. The Captain, who had been up for twenty-four hours or thereabouts on the bridge, found the memorial an anodyne and went to sleep. This gave an opportunity which could not be lost. The signatories of the memorial determined to add an oral protest to the written one, and, surrounding the Captain's cabin, gave him a view halloo which would have woken him had he been dead instead of sleeping. What followed I may not tell.

TEN YEARS OF POSTAL WORK IN INDIA.

A review of the operations of the Indian Post-office for the last ten years shows the very progressive and satisfactory condition of that important department. The following percentages of increase within the decade ending 31st March, 1886, in post-offices, mail lines, correspondence, sale of postage labels, &c., have been prepared from the annual reports of the Director-General of the Post-office:—Post-offices, 80·6 per cent.; letter-boxes, 96·3; village postmen, 138·2; postal lines, 9·6; letters, including post-cards, 97·0; newspapers, 115·9; parcels, 73·2; book and pattern packets, 217·2; ordinary postage labels, 86·0; and service postage labels, 49·7.

Facilities in the way of post-offices and letter-boxes have been nearly doubled within the last ten years, while the number of village postmen, whose functions are to deliver and collect correspondence in groups of villages in the interior, has been increased to 138 per cent. The total correspondence sent out for delivery rose from 1,9,049,217 articles in 1875-76 to 238,520,138 in 1885-86, which is close on double. The increase in newspapers of 115 per cent. is remarkable and interesting as showing the spread of education and extending importance of the Press. But by far the largest increase is observable in book and pattern packets.

Many important changes have been introduced within the last ten years, a chronicle of which will be found of interest.

In 1876-77 the postage rates between India and the United Kingdom were reduced from 6 annas to 5 annas per half ounce letter via Southampton, and from 8 annas to 6 annas via Brindisi. The loss of revenue to the Indian Post Office arising therefrom was £18,666 during the year. Redirection postage on letters and parcels was partially abolished.

In 1877-78 redirection postage was wholly abolished; postage rates on book packets and parcels were reduced; a system was introduced of procuring and delivering to the senders acknowledgments for inland registered letters; the value payable system for inland parcels and the system of insurance on inland parcels and letters were introduced. A new postal circle was created for the Province of Behar. In 1878-79 further reductions were made in postage rates on books and pattern packets; the system of granting "certificates of posting" on unregistered articles was introduced; and the rates for insurance were reduced from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. on the value insured. A new postal circle for Eastern Bengal was created.

In 1879-80 the route via Southampton for the foreign letter mail was abandoned, all letters being sent via Brindisi, at a reduced and uniform rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas per half ounce letter; a fortnightly instead of a four weekly mail was introduced with Australia; the management of the money orders business, both inland and foreign, was transferred from the Treasury Department to the Post-office; the registration fee on inland book pattern packets was reduced from 4 annas to 2 annas; and postcards were introduced. A new postal circle was created for Central India.

In 1880-81 a reduction was made in the minimum rate of postage on inland parcels from 8 annas to 4 annas. The rate of commission on value payable articles was also reduced from 2 to 1 per cent.

In 1881-82 the registration fee was reduced from 4 annas to 2 annas for all classes of post articles, both inland and foreign; a system was introduced of cash payments on newspapers; the rate of postage was reduced from $\frac{1}{2}$ anna to $\frac{1}{4}$ anna on newspapers not exceeding 3 tolahs in weight posted under this system; and rules were framed for working telephones through the agency of the Post-office.

In 1882-83 Post-Office Savings Banks were opened; India postal notes for small fixed sums were introduced, and the Post-office undertook the sale of stock notes. A money-order exchange with the United States of America was introduced, and a postal convention was concluded between the Imperial Post-office and the Post-office of the Nizam.

In 1883-84 a scheme was started for utilising the Post-office in extending the operations of the Telegraph Department, and a money order exchange with France was established.

In 1884-85 arrangements were made for the transmission of soldiers' and seamen's letters between the United Kingdom and India by the ordinary train service through France and Italy, instead of by private ships to Bombay. Inland telegraphic money orders and the payment of revenue by means of money orders (in the N.W.P. only), were introduced. A postal convention for exchange of correspondence, &c., was ratified with the Native State of Patiala; British postal orders for fixed sums ranging from one shilling to £1 were introduced. In 1885-86 a direct parcel exchange for parcels not exceeding 7lbs. in weight was instituted between the Indian and the British Post-offices, and postal convention for an exchange of correspondence, &c., were concluded with the Native States of Gwalior, Nabha, and Jhind.

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

INDIAN TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

The Pioneer says:—If the question is to be dealt with satisfactorily, and waste of public money avoided, it must proceed from the actual facts of industrial enterprise in the country. The first point to be ascertained is the needs of the labour market. The second is how can they be most effectively supplied.

The Statesman says:—We regard our suggestion that Cooper's Hill College should be sold, and the proceeds of the sale devoted partly to the Imperial Institute, and partly in the foundation of a Manual Labour school, or technical college in India itself as of real value. We would have the whole of the proceeds devoted to this latter purpose, but that the Institute has been recommended to us, most improperly, in a form that makes it almost a challenge of our loyalty to the person of the Queen. It has been a very serious misuse of Her Majesty's name.

THE DEFENCES OF KARACHI.

The Sind Gazette says:—Here, in Karachi, it is notorious that the heavy guns we have cannot even be fired from their present position without endangering the lighthouse by the concussion of the explosion. It is sheer fatuity to render thus void and waste the slight attempt at defence we have made. If we are to have guns at all let us at least see that we can use them if they are wanted.

THE PUBLIC SERVICES COMMISSION.

The Times of India says:—The Commission have ignored the opinion of all but the very limited classes who are Government servants by profession or who wish to become Government servants. The masses of the people have not been consulted; the zemindars, bankers, traders, and merchants and manufacturers have not been consulted. Mr. Hudson has shown good reason for postponing the Report of the Commission until the members have something more before them than the views of an interested and infinitesimally small minority.

THE CASE OF RUKHMIBAI.

The Bombay Gazette says:—An imprisonment of six months' duration will probably bring home to the public mind the necessity of applying a remedy which will save the courts of justice from the invidious obligation of applying a provision of English law to enforce a view of the conjugal relations so wholly irreconcilable with the principles underlying the English law that regulates them. It will now become the duty of Government to consider the question which has been raised. A short Act might easily be passed, which would not infringe in any way the provisions of the Hindu law as they stand, but would give to Rukhmibai and others in her sad plight, the relief to which they are entitled from the operation of English law, bestowing on the Hindu law an oppressive character that has not hitherto belonged to it.

The Indian Spectator says:—Rukhmibai has been well advised in appealing to the Full Bench of the High Court. The appeal cannot come off before three months or more, and the interval may yet operate in favour of justice. Mr. V. A. Modak takes a very sensible view of the case in the Bombay Gazette. We believe that to be the opinion of nine-tenths of intelligent Hindus, but it is not fashionable to express it.

VILLAGE CONSERVANCY IN INDIA.

The Englishman says:—A vast stake may be made by trying too much conservancy at one time. Sending to Europe for patterns, and appointing Sanitary Commissioners and Inspectors-General of Police to report, are measures as futile as reorganising municipal boards and encouraging the formation of village committees, with primers of sanitation in the vernacular and other apparatus. What is wanted first and foremost is to keep the people from polluting the precincts of the village, and from throwing rubbish into the tanks. These two simple measures would be worth more than all that has been done of the kind in the last fifty years, and to affirm that they could not be carried out by holding a threat of dismissal over the chowkidars is to show small knowledge of the docility of the Hindus where their caste prejudices are not interfered with.

THE BUDGET.

The Bombay Gazette says:—In spite of the largely increased loss on exchange and of an addition of £345,000 to the cost of the army, Sir Auckland Colvin has managed to balance income and expenditure without putting any new burden on the taxpayer; and this, all things considered, is anything but a small mercy, or one for which we cannot withhold gratitude to him and our stars.

THE PRESS COMMISSIONER.

The Bombay Gazette says:—Since a Press Commissioner is part of the machinery of the Supreme Government, it is a pity that he is not made more practically useful for the very occasional purposes to which he is applied. If the Press Commissioner were a Press man, he might, by a little contrivance, manage to send at least one telegram per annum to the papers, without so timing its arrival that it comes to hand when the newspapers are printed. His solitary telegram is, like some Governments that history wots of, liable to be dismissed with the fatal formula "Too Late."

NATIVE VOLUNTEERS.

The Poona Observer says:—Were the movement to be opened up amongst the Natives, a very imposing body of Volunteers might be enrolled. Of course, we do not mean by this that the movement should be indiscriminately opened to any or every person coming forward; but with judicious management we think that Volunteering might be made more general, so as to embrace all communities. If the country can be trusted with a reserve, such as has lately been introduced, it is not without the bounds of possibility that it could be trusted to participate in the Volunteer movement. If the concession be decided upon, the details of the scheme could be easily worked out.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The attention of the Anglo-Indian reader, who glances over the table of contents of the present number, will naturally be attracted to Captain Norman's article on "The Reorganisation of the Indian Army." It is not difficult to point out anomalies in this, as in most other, British "institutions;" though, somehow or other, anomalies notwithstanding, the "institution," in most cases, serves its purpose. We are far from denying that Captain Norman has hit many a blot, or that Sir F. Roberts has a fine and a wide field for the display of his reconstructive abilities. The writer dwells on the ridiculous under-officering of the Native regiments (most prominently brought to light, during actual service, in the case of the 17th Bengal Infantry in Egypt p. 401), the consequent shifting of officers, the slow promotion of Native officers, and the scanty notice vouchsafed them after retirement, the want of care exercised in selecting as recruits the more warlike races only (p. 405), and on many other points, the necessity of change in which has all along been admitted. His paper, which well merits perusal, would have been improved had he refrained from overstating his case. To say, for instance, that "the main business" of the military member of the Viceroy's Council "appears to be to veto every proposition" (we presume 'proposal' is meant) "advanced by a Commander-in-Chief" (p. 399) is an exaggeration, bordering on the grotesque. And a Commander-in-Chief, himself, be it noted, an ex-officio member of the Viceroy's Council—whose presence may at any moment be required at any point between Burma and the Afghan Frontier—may feel less inclined than Captain Norman to complain of being always sure that the military aspect of every question is duly urged, in his own absence, at the Headquarters of the Government. The question, how far it may be possible to employ, in line with British troops, before an European enemy, Native regiments, commanded, and wholly officered, by Natives, touched on (pp. 403-4) by the gallant writer, is a very wide and a very difficult one. Undoubtedly, the fact that such regiments "in a war with Russia would oftentimes find themselves opposed to Cossack regiments officered entirely by Orientals" is a fact to be borne in mind: nor do we believe that the Anglo-Indian Generals are less capable than those of the Tsar, to turn to account the admirable fighting material which is, avowedly, at their disposal.

It was to be expected that the article on the Tory Democratic party in the March number of the National would cause some searchings of heart among its members; and we have, accordingly, a vigorous rejoinder from the practised pen of Lord Dunraven, who maintains that Tory Democracy is merely Practical Toryism writ large; and he is able to point triumphantly to the resignation of Lord Randolph Churchill as a proof that the apostle, at least, of the new Gospel translates into practice his theories as to retrenchment. Lord Dunraven emphatically repudiates the alliance, alleged by Mr. Baumann to exist, between Radicalism, which is "despotic, destructive, and subversive," and Tory Democracy, which is "especially conservative and constructive."

A very important topic receives notice in Mr. C. H. Atteridge's paper on the Russian Frontiers of Austro-Hungary. Wherever Russia adjoins, it is well to make sure of territorial bolts and bars. And on no State is this more incumbent, than on Austria, whose "stupendous ingratitude" in 1854-5 has never been forgotten or forgiven by her Northern neighbour, in whose path, Phosphorus-wards, she stands. That Austria is not adequately prepared against unforeseen aggression, is a conclusion at which no one can fail to arrive, who inspects Mr. Atteridge's map while reading his paper.

* "The National Review." May, 1887. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

Few persons will read without surprise Mr. Hugh Hall's somewhat startling contribution on "The Law of Theft." Such anomalies as those pointed out on pages 371, 372, and 376, which do not, unfortunately, admit of being adequately stated within the space available to us, are enough to shake one's faith in the opinion that there is common-sense in the members of either Bench or Bar.

It is difficult to live within the limits of a "municipality" without being convinced that municipal government is a very expensive—well, certainly not—luxury. The results of some fifty years of this would-be home-rule are admirably summarised by Mr. Stanley Leighton. Within the last thirty years "the rates have risen in urban England from 2s. in the £ to 6s., and even 8s. in the £." . . . "In 1874 the local debt was £84,000,000, it is now £165,000,000;" while "the whole assessable value of the country is only £143,000,000" (p. 422). (What a farce for us to boast of having paid 150 millions off the National Debt since 1815!) At the same time, the assessable value is decreasing, and the "improvements" to carry out which the loans constituting this vast indebtedness (sometimes repayable in 60 or 100 years) were contracted will in many cases be worn out, or, through new inventions, obsolete—to say nothing of the scandalous jobbery which has, all but universally in the towns, characterised municipal undertakings. It is at least satisfactory, that, in the counties, where affairs are managed by a class of men, in all respects differing from the noisy demagogues or unscrupulous traders who form "municipal authorities," a very different state of matters prevails.

Mr. F. T. Palgrave reprints a lecture on "Poetry and the Fine Arts" (delivered by himself in the Theatre of the Museum at Oxford), remarkable for the well-drawn distinction between the "sculpturesque" tone of classical, and the "picturesque" tendency of mediæval and of modern, poetry. A well-written paper, by Mr. Hitchman, on Lothair and Endymion, and Mr. Paul's notice of Brunetière's discriminative article (in the Revue des deux Mondes) on Victor Hugo, afford pabulum to the critic, while the tastes of those who desire lighter reading are duly catered for in "Rambler's" Notes of a spring holiday passed in Italy.

SHIKAR SKETCHES.*

There are not a few persons who cling to the opinion that England owes her greatness in large measure to that love of sport which is the birthright of every son of Albion. At first sight the contention seems absurd, but reflection will serve to show that there is at least a considerable substratum of truth in the assertion. It is impossible, for instance, to read Captain Moray Brown's most interesting "Shikar Sketches" without noticing the toils, the troubles, the dangers, the escapes, the fatigues, which fall to the sportsman's lot. And these are precisely the characteristics which stand a man in good stead in the battle of life—"pluck and perseverance" are alike the motto of the nation and of the "Shikar." It is not denied that sport will not produce these characteristics, but it will develop them, and it may be taken for granted that when—if ever—the people of this land betake themselves to effeminate and luxurious pastimes in place of the manly relaxation and toilsome amusements of their ancestors, the sun of England's greatness will have commenced to decline towards the horizon of extinction and decay.

Captain Moray Brown's work has much to recommend it. In the first place it exhibits at every turn that earnest, genuine enthusiasm without which man is but an animated mass of humanity—soulless, aimless, a mere wreck drifting on the ocean of life, blown hither and thither by the gust of fancy and the breath of chance. What a pleasure it is to take up this volume at random and find a passage such as this, selected at hazard from hundreds of sentences inspired with the same sentiment. "During the witching hours of night—that is, if you be a lover of nature, and take an interest in natural history—you will have opportunities afforded you of seeing and observing unseen yourself the habits of many animals and birds that are invisible during the hotter hours of day, when they retire to cool, dark spots in the jungle, where they are protected from the fierce rays of the mid day sun, and are unlikely to be intruded upon by man; whilst your excitement will be kept up by the chance of at any moment seeing the monarch of the jungle, the royal tiger himself, stalk forth to quench his thirst." One's blood seems to course quicker in one's veins at the bare thought of such things. But in addition to this fervour and ardour, there is a charm in Captain Moray Brown's volume which will commend itself to each and every reader. We allude to the absence of exaggeration. "I have given," says he, "merely plain records of some incidents of Indian sport that came under my own observation, and within that of my friends." What modesty! And yet withal it may be questioned whether, had he been inclined to boast and make much of his exploits, there are half-a-dozen men living who have done more, seen more, triumphed more, and, of course, failed more, in the paths of "Shikari" than himself. His unpretentious simplicity is also the more to be commended because it is so easy and so natural to enlarge upon one's powers, and magnify one's dangers. When a tiger comes rushing open-mouthed out of the jungle, what more inevitable than to pen in the journal that if this, that, and the other had not happened, the writer would have left a blank in the page, which, &c., &c., all hangs upon the "if," and an inference is created that the "all" in question redounds to the credit of the "Shikar." Captain Moray Brown will have none of this. He writes himself down an ass far more frequently than he applauds himself as a hero. He never adds inches to the skin of a slain tiger, or pounds to the weight of a fallen "porker"—a panther never does duty for a monarch of the woods. As he himself says of himself, he has described "the events naturally, and devoid of any artificial or dramatic element." He has succeeded, and the result is a work as fascinating as it is artless, as truthful as it is exciting, and as graphic as it is unpretentious.

CARLYLE AS SEEN IN HIS WORKS.*

That Carlyle was a genius is the verdict of mankind at large; equally there is a general consensus of opinion that he was erratic beyond even the limit allowable to those whose abilities are so transcendent as to become a law to themselves. He is a "study," and much as the world read his works it may be doubted, perhaps, whether his character is altogether rightly understood, or his peculiarities assigned to their true cause. In these circumstances there is ample scope for Mr. Kerr's essays, designed to set forth this perplexing hero alike as a writer and as a man. Obviously a couple of hundred pages of print could not possibly exhaust a subject as voluminous in its nature as the works it is intended to dissect, and it is explained in the Preface that "much has been purposely omitted in order not to interfere with the main design, which was to touch lightly upon salient points and prominent features, to exhibit a general outline rather than a complete picture."

We are glad to observe that Mr. Kerr, in forming his estimate of Mr. Carlyle's character, takes into consideration the circumstances of his earlier career. First came his poverty—life in those days was with him a daily struggle for daily bread. Forced by fate to adopt the "trade" of teaching, his soul recoiled from a means of existence which was repugnant to his feelings, and utterly unsuited to his taste. Then came a dash at divinity, followed by a turn at law; but neither of these professions was congenial to his instincts. So, baffled in all directions, he "aspired to a professor's chair in one of our northern universities;" but failure dogged his steps. Nor were his efforts in the path of literature more successful. The many-headed public cared nought for his rough-and-ready style of composition, so different to what was fashionable, and so unlike ought to which the world at large had been accustomed. Publishers turned a deaf ear to his entreaties. In vain did he seek an opening for his talents and a sphere for his abilities. And when, after weary years of bitter poverty, of daily struggles, and of toilsome delay, Goddess Fortune smiled upon his efforts, and began to pour into his lap fame, affluence, and success, Thomas Carlyle had become a soured, morbid, morose, and cynical philosopher. The result is doubtless much to be regretted, but it will scarcely afford occasion for wonder. It is rare to find a man in late life free himself entirely from the trammels of his past career, and rise above the surroundings which stereotyped his character, and indelibly "set" his habits of thought and mind. No; the iron is not easily withdrawn from the soul when once it has entered therein.

Equally, too, we are glad that, in discussing the very delicate and vexed question as to Carlyle's relations towards his wife, Mr. Kerr does not overlook that, wrapped up as was the former in his books, he was, he could be, no fitting companion for the former—a literary man is rarely a genial spouse. "I have a husband, but no companion," fitly describes in Mrs. Carlyle's own words the trouble which weighed her down; this was the keynote of unharmonious harmony. Kind, sympathetic to a degree, unusual in this selfish world, the "refined attentions" of matrimonial life found no place in the heart of a litterateur, who lived in his library, and to whom his volumes were his pride, his love, and his associates.

Mr. Kerr is evidently an admirer of the subject of his sketches. He clearly is familiar with all the compositions of the great Essayist. He writes with confidence, because he has studied with care; and a perusal of his fairly-balanced criticism will tend to dispel not a few errors, and enable the reader to form a more accurate conception of a man of whom everyone talks, and whom few understand.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1887.

THE WRECK OF THE TASMANIA.

THERE is no mercantile enterprise which stands higher in public estimation than the justly celebrated company known as the P. and O. For almost half a century it has been doing good and faithful service in carrying men and merchandise between England and India, and in excellence of arrangements and consideration for the interests of the public, which has so freely patronised it, it holds, perhaps, the first position in that magnificent body the British Mercantile Marine. Its splendid fleet of steamers, the ability of the commanders, the courtesy of the officers, and the skill and discipline of the crews, have long been a boast amongst Englishmen whose business or pleasure has taken them into Eastern waters. Anglo-Indians especially are proud, and justly so, of the P. and O. They recognise and appreciate the punctuality, the care, the liberality, and all the other nautical virtues which have raised the Company to the proud and wealthy position which it now occupies. Notwithstanding the economic and other attractions offered to Eastern travellers by rival companies the P. and O. is still in front of all its competitors. The records of the voyages made by its vessels contain very few incidents of wreck or accident; and this fact has, of course, strengthened the confidence accorded to the Company by the public. But such a disaster as that which has just happened to the Tasmania must certainly be a shock to many old friends of the Peninsular and Oriental. The captain of the ill-fated steamer is dead and gone beyond the censure of reproach, but it would be no charity to the living if to the dead to ignore the statements which have appeared in the public prints to the effect that the nerve of the commander of the vessel was, in consequence of ill-health or age, not of the strength to command the confidence of passengers or crew in an hour of danger. The suggestion has been made in more quarters than one that the P. and O. Company should allow their captains to retire earlier on pension, and so secure the services of younger and more energetic men. But this is not the immediate purpose of this article. The story of the wreck of the Tasmania is one which tells of the utter breakdown of discipline, courage, and resource amongst the ship's crew, which was chiefly composed of Lascars. These men are not bad sailors in quiet and warm waters; they are hard-working, obedient, sober, and intelligent enough when it is all fair-weather sailing. They also serve for very low wages, which fact is, of course, the chief reason why they are employed by shipowners or ship companies. But in moments of difficulty and danger they lose all nerve, and are not only worse than useless—they add to the terrors of shipwreck. In the case of the Tasmania they were not only deaf to any orders, or calls, or remonstrances, but they attempted to save their own lives at the risk of the lives of all on board; they rushed for the boats, and cut away a raft which had been made for the benefit of all. But it was not only their cowardice and insubordination which added to the perils of the night, but their physical weakness and want of stamina made them helpless as well as terror-stricken. Numbers of them perished from cold and exposure during the hours that the danger lasted. Fortunately the wind abated, and so the passengers and the remainder of the ship's company were saved with the exception of the captain and two officers. But for this good fortune the loss of life might have been terrible. There can hardly be a more horrible position than that of a passenger ship in a wreck deserted by the crew. As a rule the British sailor is ever ready in resources in times of peril; but the good ship Tasmania appears to have been manned chiefly by Lascars, and to the tender mercies of these miserable wretches the lives of helpless women and children were at first confided. Luckily the pluck which is common to most Englishmen was forthcoming amongst the passengers, and so the cowardice and desertion of the Lascars did little evil. But after this melancholy experience it surely will be fitting for a great and wealthy company like the P. and O. to study efficiency a little more than economy in manning their vessels, and have a fair complement of experienced English sailors on board as a counterpoise to the cheap but cowardly Lascar element.

Dr. SIMPSON is certainly very extravagant, says the Statesman, when he speaks of "the mortality of the people of India being double what it need be, double that of England, and that this means that every year in India there occur, probably, five millions of needless deaths, and a hundred millions of severe cases of preventable disease." If we assume the death-rate of India to be 25 per mille, or about the same as at home, the aggregate mortality of the whole 250 millions of British India and the Native States together will be 6½ millions of deaths a year. But we doubt greatly whether the mortality of India is as high as that of the United Kingdom. It is cold that kills, not heat. The rapid increase in the population of India, moreover, prohibits the belief of an excessive death-rate. A small proportion only of the population of the country is urban. Its population is what we call a country population, and it is the urban and not the village population that is destroyed by insanitary conditions. Upon the whole we doubt whether the Indian death-rate is as high as at home. It is in large cities like Calcutta that the insanitary conditions under which the people live prove so deadly to them, and it is the cities and towns of India that need the reforms that are unattainable with their present revenues.

SITTING ON A RAIL.—Dealing with the case of Rukhmabai the Bengalee says:—"We fear no Hindu wife will sympathise with Rukhmabai in her resolve. The man may be unworthy of her in every respect, but he is her husband, and the lord and master of the Hindu wife. To him she owes unstinted allegiance, and he in his turn owes her love without bounds. This is a patriarchal feeling, but there it exists, deep-seated in the heart of the Hindu woman. What is learning and what are earthly accomplishments compared to the love of the husband and the enjoyment of his company! But this love apparently Rukhmabai had not. There is an element of personal vindictiveness on the part of the husband which must deepen our sympathies for Rukhmabai. If the wife is so unwilling to live with the husband, why all this pressure, this persistent appeal to law? Domestic happiness could not exist under these circumstances. Perhaps there is more in the case than we know of. But at any rate it teaches a moral which we would do well to lay to heart. If Rukhmabai had been more fortunately wedded, and in the maturity of years, she would probably have been, with her accomplishments and her talents, the centre of a prosperous and happy family, cheering her home and drawing to herself in an unstinted measure the affections of her husband and of her relations—she would not have been the inmate of a prison. Apart from other objections, child-marriage perpetuates an outrage upon womankind. So unnatural is the institution that in the most solemn event of life, the party most deeply concerned has no voice."

BROAD ARROW

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent character of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Government, and is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Armies, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

TO THE HOLDERS OF INDIA £4 PER CENT. STOCK, & INDIA £4 PER CENT. STOCK CERTIFICATES.

INDIA OFFICE, 19th April, 1887.

The Secretary of State for India in Council hereby gives notice that, with reference to the India £4 per Cent. Stock and India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates becoming redeemable at par on or after the 10th October, 1888, as specified in the Advertisements under which the Stock and Stock Certificates have been issued, he is willing to grant a like amount of India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock and India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock Certificates respectively, in exchange for such India £4 per Cent. Stock and India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates.

The holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates, who avail themselves of this offer, will receive on the 6th July, 1887, a payment of £1 12s. 6d. per Cent. on the amount of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates surrendered, being a quarter's interest at £4 per Cent. per annum to that date, and ten shillings per Cent. per annum for a year and a quarter to October, 1888, paid in advance; and subsequently interest will be due quarterly on the 5th October, 5th January, 5th April, and 5th July in each year, at the rate of £3 10s. per cent. per annum.

The Stock and Stock Certificates granted in exchange will be consolidated with the India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock now existing, which is not redeemable until the 5th January, 1891, but will be redeemable at par on or after that day, upon one year's previous notice having been given in The London Gazette by the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The Books of the Stock are kept at the Bank of England, where all Assignments and Transfers are made. All Transfers and Stock Certificates are free of Stamp Duty.

The same facilities are given in respect of this Stock for the transmission of dividend warrants by post, and for the exchange of Stock into Stock Certificates with coupons annexed payable to bearer, as are given in the case of Consols and India Four and Three per Cent. Stocks. Trustees are empowered to invest Trust Funds in this Stock, unless expressly forbidden by the Instrument creating the Trust.

The holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates, who may desire to convert their Stock or Certificates upon the terms above-mentioned, are hereby required to signify their assent to the Secretary of State for India in Council, in a form to be obtained at the Chief Accountant's Office at the Bank of England; and such assents must be delivered at the Chief Accountant's Office at the Bank of England on or before Wednesday the 1st June, 1887. From the time of the delivery of such assents the holders of the India £4 per Cent. Stock thereby affected will be precluded from dealing with their respective shares of that Stock; but on the 8th June, or, in the case of assents sent in on or before the 26th May, or the 2nd June, their share of India £4 per Cent. having been cancelled, corresponding amounts of India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock will be inscribed in their names, and may from that date be dealt in. The assents of holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates must be accompanied by the Stock Certificates therein referred to, for which a receipt will be given, that will be exchangeable for the new India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock Certificates after the expiration of seven days from the date of surrender.

In the case of Stock transferable at the Bank of Ireland, and of Certificates issued in respect thereof, the forms must be obtained from the Accountant-General's Office at the Bank of Ireland, and the assents must be delivered at that Office on or before the 1st June, 1887, as aforesaid.

A Bill will be introduced into Parliament to make Powers of Attorney and Requests for transmission of Dividend Warrants by post relating to India £4 per Cent. Stock surrendered as above, applicable to India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock.

It is the intention of the Secretary of State in Council that all holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock or India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates who do not, on or before Wednesday, the 1st June, 1887, signify in the manner above prescribed their assent to accept India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock or India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock Certificates in lieu thereof, shall be paid off at par on the 10th October, 1888, due notice of the repayment being in that case given in October, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 22nd April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 20th April; and from Calcutta to the 19th April.

THERE is not likely to be much new legislation before the Imperial Legislative Council at Simla this season. Among the measures to be introduced will be a Bill to reduce the Stamp Duties on Policies of Fire Insurance, and probably one to consolidate the many Acts relating to Indian ports. The Indian Marine Service Bill will most likely be passed in June, and the Allahabad University Bill is almost sure to be disposed of before the cold weather.

AN Indian Army Bill may possibly be brought forward during the Session. The Punjab Land Bills are to come before the Select Committee again, next month, in Simla. They will probably be republished then in a revised shape and passed before the Government return to Calcutta.

It is suggested that a local company be formed to establish more direct trade with China.

M. E. GASSELIN, the new Consul for France, has arrived in Calcutta, and taken charge of the Consulate.

A NEW cotton mill was opened at Bhownuggur on the 9th by the Acting Political Agent, Colonel Wodehouse.

MR. W. MAIDMENT, Assistant Secretary to the Government, Military, Marine and Ecclesiastical Departments, has retired after forty-eight years' service.

THE inhabitants of Mhow have at a public meeting passed resolutions protesting against the income tax.

THE statement of traffic on the G.I.P. for the week ending the 9th ult. shows an increase in the receipts of Rs. 42,931 on the previous week.

AFTER much talk and delay a suitable hospital building will shortly be commenced at Nagpur. The foundation stone is to be laid by the Commissioner before he proceeds on furlough.

AN extensive fire has occurred at Delhi. West's Patent Cotton Press, the engineer's house, and a large number of huts were burned down. The damage is estimated at Rs. 30,000.

THE committee appointed by Government to inquire into the future extension of the City of Bombay has framed a series of questions with the view to ascertaining the opinions of experts and the public generally on the subject.

THE advantages of the Parsee Lying-in Hospital near the Marine Lines station have already been availed of by several Parsee ladies. About twenty others have sent in applications with a similar object.

THE Native friends and admirers of Dr. Boyd, whose courtesy and considerateness have made him very popular in the Native community, are making arrangements to give him an entertainment before his departure from Bombay.

MR. BARTON GROVES has taken over charge, in Calcutta, of the Deputy Postmaster-Generalship of Burma, in succession to Mr. J. B. Short, who goes on three months' leave. Mr. Groves leaves this for Burma by the present mail steamer.

THE new telegraph line connecting Manipur with Assam, via Kohima, was opened for traffic on the 31st ultimo. Bhamo was linked with Mandalay by wire on the 1st inst.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire broke out in the town of Pegu, and a large part of the town was burned down; the Municipal Bazaar fortunately escaped.

A SERIOUS fire has occurred in the Rawal Pindi Arsenal, but no details regarding it have yet been received. The damage caused will probably be found to be immense.

THE extension of the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court to Oudh has not yet passed out of the preliminary stage, the Government of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, after consultation with the High Court, being about to address the Government of India regarding various practical details. The Secretary of State will, of course, have to be addressed on the subject; and, if he approves of the proposal, special legislation in the Viceroy's Council will then be necessary.

AT the meeting of the Senate of the Bombay University Mr. Principal Wordsworth proposed, as recommended by the Syndicate, that his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, ex-officio Fellow of the University, be appointed a member of the Faculty of Arts and Civil Engineering.

MR. H. J. S. COTTON, Secretary to the Board of Revenue, has been appointed to officiate as Chairman of the Calcutta Municipality during the absence, on leave, of Sir H. L. Harrison.

THE MAHARAJ RANA OF DHOLEPUR had a sunstroke at the first day's meeting of the Muttra Tent Club, and his Highness had to retire in consequence from the competition for Muttra Cup. The doctors have now ordered him to the hills.

THE sub-committee appointed by the Bangalore Municipality to increase the storage capacity of tanks, and secure the purity of the water, propose to recommend to the Government of India to make a grant of Rs. 50,000 for the purpose. The Municipal Engineer has been directed to submit plans and estimates for professional opinion and for the approval of Colonel Ross Thompson, Presidency Executive Engineer.

PROFESSOR J. A. DALAL, M.A., LL.B., has accepted the position of Principal of the Guzerat College at Ahmedabad which has now passed under the administration of the local committee. Mr. Dalal was for a considerable time in charge of the College during the absence of Mr. Best, and the conspicuous position it achieved in the various University examinations during that time seems to have made it a very popular institution in the Presidency, and attracted the attention both of the Director of Public Instruction and the Government of Bombay.

A CASE of human sacrifice is under magisterial investigation in the Tirwadana district of the Madras Presidency.

OBITUARY.—Rajah Rajendro Mullick Rai Bahadoor, head of the great Mullick family, and president of the Shooburno Bonick Shova.

Indian Engineering says:—"Mr. T. S. Pyne, M.I.M.E., representative of Messrs. Walsh, Lovett and Co., left Jamrud for Cabul, under an escort of the Ameer's cavalry, on the 24th April. The object of Mr. Pyne's engagement is the erection of new workshops and the fitting of them with the latest machinery, with a view to render the Afghan ruler independent of extraneous sources in an important respect. We understand that ironstone, coal, and other minerals are found beyond our frontier in abundance, and it is in contemplation to work them. Mr. Pyne takes two Chinese miners with him and several Indian workmen."

CAPTAIN HAYES, who is making a tour of Assam, writes enthusiastically of the "lovely climate" of that outlying province. "Two months ago," he says, "it was hot in Bombay, and beginning to be stifling in Calcutta. Yet here we are now in Assam, early in April, wearing thick cloth clothes by day, and revealing under the blankets at night! Although it becomes close and 'muggy' later on, still there is no getting over the fact of the six months' delightful cold weather with which the inhabitants of this region are blest. No better proof of the health-giving properties of the Assam climate could be afforded than the fresh colour and good condition of the planters, who are as stalwart a race of men as any to be found in or out of the United Kingdom."

Notes of the Week.

THE news from Afghanistan, according to the Times telegram from Calcutta, dated yesterday, continues to be "untrustworthy." The Ameer's troops and the Ghilzais have had one or two engagements, each side claiming the victory. The Ghilzais are, no doubt, formidable foes, but the Ameer has a regular army of cavalry, infantry, and artillery fairly drilled, and, what is stronger still, he has money. Under these circumstances he ought to be able to do more than hold his own. His chief danger lies in the chance of a revolt of his troops. There, it is stated, are three months in arrears of pay, but this is a very normal state of things in Oriental armies. To revolt on this account, and place themselves under another ruler, would hardly alter the situation for the soldiery, so far as pay-day is concerned. Besides, they can still loot the Cabul Treasury and remain loyal—according to their own ideas.

BUT it must be allowed that the present Ameer is not popular. He is a tyrant, suspicious as all tyrants are, and is greedy of money. The reports of the excessive taxes which he is levying upon his subjects may or may not be exaggerated. The fiscal ways of semi-barbarous Powers are often open to cavil, and then it must be remembered that the collection of taxes in Afghanistan is not an easy matter. Without possessing the elaborate organisation of a Land League, the turbulent tribes of that delightful country have many direct and indirect ways of avoiding State imposts. The direct way is to murder the tax-gatherer—a plan which is not altogether unknown in a sister island—the indirect way is to take to a nomad life, and do a little revolting and plundering on one's own account. In either case the difficulty of collecting the revenue is considerable.

THE Times correspondent says that Abdur Rahman is trying to do in Afghanistan what our Henry VII. accomplished in England, forgetting, however, that the English barons had been previously weakened in power by the Wars of the Roses, whereas the strength of the Ghilzai and Durani Sirdars still remains intact. It is, perhaps, a compliment to Englishmen that an Ameer of Afghanistan should endeavour to rule his country according to the veracious chronicles of English history, but we doubt whether the Ameer has yet given much attention to the methods of Henry VII. He knows of other methods which are much better understood by himself and his subjects.

THE best proof, however, that the Ameer is still strong enough for his enemies is that he has yet made no appeal for help, all rumours to the contrary notwithstanding. He has not asked any aid from the Indian Government, and he vouchsafes very little information to it as to what he is doing. The alarmists will possibly construe this reticence into an assurance that he is intriguing with Russia, and may discover in it a fresh reason for an immediate British advance into Afghanistan, and the institution of another Afghan campaign for the delectation of the British taxpayer, who is at present suffering from a plethora of money.

In the meantime we are told that the Russians are watching with great interest the alarming news from Afghanistan which is daily appearing in the English papers, and that they are "very delighted." This is very likely. If the French cynic's aphorism be true that men always find something to rejoice at in the misfortunes of their friends, why should they not be merry over the misfortunes of their enemies? Russia thinks that England is in great trouble about Afghanistan, and naturally rejoices thereat. She may also hope that some great disaster may follow, but we do not think with the Times correspondent at St. Petersburg that this hope is founded on the belief that "such a disaster would force the British Commissioner now there to give way to Russian claims more than he is inclined to do at present." We rather imagine that Russia treats the Boundary Commission as an elaborate joke. A nation that has been in the habit of tearing up treaties in the faces of the European Powers with which they were made is hardly likely, when the occasion arises, to hesitate from knocking down a few boundary pillars on a frontier in Central Asia and walking over the border at its own sweet will.

THE MAHARAJAH DHULEEP SINGH is said to be still at Moscow with his friend, "Mr. Casey." Both these "distinguished foreigners," according to a contemporary, appear to be enjoying what the Yankees call a "high old time" at the chief hotel, where the stipend of £25,000 allowed by our Government to the Sikh Prince permits "His Daskiness" to liberally entertain all callers. The friends, Dhuleep and Casey, have been frequently interviewed by M. Katkoff, the confidant of the Czar, and the Maharajah is reported to have said that he has no desire to overthrow the British Empire in India. Should Russia, in fact, annex Afghanistan, the Prince will not interfere. "This reminds us that when the Greek Minister informed the English Ambassador that the Hellenic Government would not join in any European war, Punch gave an admirable cartoon, declaring that the Beadle of the Burlington Arcade had also decided to remain neutral."

ALTHOUGH the presence of Dhuleep Singh and Suchait Singh with their friend Mr. Patrick Casey at Moscow need cause no alarm to the British Government, which knows that the two Indian princes are powerless to do it any harm even in the Punjab, it is not the less to be regretted that our dealings with both of these exile noblemen were not characterised with a little more tact, to say nothing of generosity. The Maharaja has perhaps been his own enemy, but the scandal which is now abroad might, we think, have been avoided. Now it is too late. The case of Suchait Singh is a very hard one. The people of Chamba still regard him as their rightful Rajah, and he certainly used every constitutional means to get his claims recognised before he took the foolish step which he has done since with Dhuleep Singh.

THAT amiable Theosophist, Mr. A. O. Hume, is thus irreverently written of by the Hindu Herald of Calcutta:—

Mr. A. O. Hume, we hear, is not well, and has gone to Simla. Like most of our countrymen, we are fully inclined to believe in his sincerity for our political amelioration. But we must confess that we are really tired of the meetings got up by him and his followers for agitating about the reconstitution of our legislature on a representative basis. So little are we capable of appreciating the value of Mr. Hume's pet scheme that he would not be sorry at all if he would retire from the arena of our politics for good, and pass the rest of his life in the Himalayan regions like his namesake, Mahatma Humi. We should also feel glad if he would take some of his followers along with him, so that they may not meddle or muddle in politics as they are now doing.

This is hard on Mr. Hume, who has striven for so long and so unceasingly to win the intellectual Babu into his confidence and creed.

A MILITARY contemporary writes:—"An Indian correspondent suggests what seems to be a very simple plan of saving officers in that country the loss which they now incur, owing to the depreciation of the rupee. The suggestion is that all pay should be made over in sterling in England to the regimental agents, so that an officer in India drawing for his own wants there, or to meet family expenses at home, would be no loser as at present, but indeed a gainer by the exchange. The idea is ingenious, but it seems to have been forgotten that officers in India are paid out of the revenues of India, and that the Government there would have to provide the sterling amount to place with the regimental agents in England. This would, of course, necessitate a loss to the exchequer, and of a certainty occasion a growl from the taxpayer when he saw the items in the Budget. There is but one way of facing the difficulty, and this we have more than once pointed out in these columns, viz., for Government to increase the pay of its officers, so as to bring it up to the average rate which it was ten years ago when the rupee was at a valuation of about 1s. 9½d. This would only be a fair fulfilment of contract which no taxpayer could complain against. It would not be a matter of generosity, but of justice."

THE returns of Indian foreign trade for the month of February, 1887, and for the eleven months ending with February, show a large increase in both imports and exports of merchandise, both for the month and the eleven months, over the corresponding periods of the two years preceding. Taking the imports for the eleven months, there was an increase of value compared with 1885-86, amounting to over five crores of rupees, while the exports have advanced by about an equal amount on a much larger total. The imports of treasure, on the other hand, have fallen by four crores of rupees, while the exports have risen by about 60 lakhs. In the case of exports a considerable falling off in rice (Bengal), indigo, and some kinds of seeds, was more than counterbalanced by a large increase in the exports of raw cotton and a considerable advance under raw jute, wheat, tea, and opium. It is interesting to note that the increase in wheat exports is wholly due to the remarkable development of a trade with Italy and a recovery in that with France, there being a large falling-off in the trade with the United Kingdom. The exports to Italy in the eleven corresponding months of 1884-85 amounted to only 660,000 cwt., valued at about 24 lakhs; the present returns give nearly five million cwts. valued at nearly two crores. The increased exportation of wheat took place entirely from Bombay or Calcutta, that from Karachi falling away by the extraordinary amount of 3½ million cwts., valued at nearly 1½ crores.

CALCUTTA, MAY 8.

The sub-committee of the public Service Commission began its sittings at Simla with the examination of General Browne, chief engineer of the Sind-Pishin Railway, who gave very valuable evidence on the subject of recruiting for the Public Works Department. He considered engineers trained at Cooper's Hill had a somewhat better professional education than those trained at Roorkee, but the latter had more fixed ideas of discipline and understood Natives better. He had met only one Native engineer in the superior grades who was worth anything; but Natives were excellent in subordinate grades. These, however, were not trained engineers, but belonged to the workmen class of Bongalees, and were useless for frontier work, not having sufficient strength of mind. He would employ only European engineers on the frontier, and would put surveys and railways on the frontier under the Military Works Department.

The first instalment of the loan due from the Gwalior Regency to the Indian Government, consisting of eighty lakhs of Gwalior rupees, arrived at Calcutta on Wednesday.

The Native cavalry officers going to England to represent the Indian army at the Jubilee will be selected from the following corps:—The Viceroy's Bodyguard, the Punjab Cavalry Guides, the Hyderabad Contingent, and the Central Indian Horse, one each; Bengal Cavalry, five; Madras, one; Bombay, two. Each officer will receive £1 daily in addition to their Indian pay. They are leaving Bombay on Friday. Captain Muir of the Bodyguard goes in command.

It is stated that the Government are engaged in inquiring of the Native chiefs through whose lands a railway to Simla would run as to the terms on which they would sell the land. There is no immediate intention of making the line, and the present inquiries are only with a view of arriving at an estimate of the cost.

Sir Salar Jung was to leave Bombay for England on Friday.

BURMA.

MAY 7.

Full details have been received of the affair in which Captain A. W. Rendle, of the 10th Madras Light Infantry, was killed. They show a serious renewal of disturbances in the Sidotia district, which for some time past has been perfectly quiet. On the 30th of April the post at Sidotia was attacked at 4 p.m. by a large body of dacoits. The garrison made a sortie, and Captain Rendle, who was commanding, was killed while leading the charge against the enemy. The command then devolved on a Native officer, Jemadar Noorswamy. The skirmish lasted three hours. The enemy was dispersed by ten o'clock with a loss of ten killed, and several wounded. Besides Captain Rendle, our casualties were four Sepoys wounded.

The attack on the post at Sidotia was renewed on the 2nd and 4th of May. On the latter occasion a determined attack was made by a large body of dacoits, who were driven off with a loss of thirty killed. Jemadar Noorswamy, commanding, was severely wounded, and one sepoy was wounded. Reinforcements were at once despatched to Sidotia. Lieutenant Wilson, with sixty mounted infantry of the Rifle Brigade, left Pilangaw for Sidotia. Another party of mounted infantry were despatched from Salem. The attack on Sidotia was made by Bohs Schwank's men, who are believed to have been commanded by Ootamt, his chief lieutenant, an ex-Phoongyee.

A severe cyclone swept over Rangoon on Tuesday morning, doing much damage. Hundreds of trees were blown down, the street traffic was interrupted, many houses, warehouses, and mills were unroofed, quantities of rice and goods were injured, and several vessels parted cables or dragged anchors and collided, but there was no important loss among shipping. Numbers of boats were swamped or dashed to pieces. It is believed there was no loss of life on land, but about a dozen men are missing from boats. The Shoay Dragon Pagoda suffered severely. It is impossible as yet to estimate the amount of the damage.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, MAY 8.

There is still a remarkable absence of trustworthy news from Afghanistan, but such as was received last week tends to show that the two victories of the Ameer's troops were not so complete as originally reported. Colonel Sikunder Khan in particular appears to have greatly exaggerated his success in the affair at Ataghar. More recent and authentic accounts state that the Royal troops were beaten at first, and some of them actually fled to Khelat-i-Ghilzai. Eventually, however, they managed to repulse the Ghilzai attack by making a breastwork of their camels; but the loss of the rebels was far short of the figures originally mentioned, and Sikunder was unable to follow up his victory.

The latest news describes him as intrenched on the borders of the Maruf district, while the Ghilzais occupy their old position at Ataghar.

A second fight between the two forces seems imminent. Some doubt had been thrown on the other alleged victory at Mukur; but the Ameer has received a despatch from General Gholam Hyder Orakzai, stating that after an engagement lasting from daybreak till ten o'clock the rebels were driven up Mukur hill, on the slopes of which they had taken up position.

A report was current last week that the Shinwarris near Jellalabad had risen and attacked the Ameer's Commander-in-Chief, but this is not confirmed. Cabul is said to be almost denuded of troops, all available regiments being sent against the rebels, and the Governor of Candahar is trying to raise Durani recruits.

Meanwhile the Ameer shows no signs of relaxing the severity of his rule, but continues to impose taxes, and to punish all who fall under suspicion as harshly as before. But although his prospects look somewhat more alarming than a week ago, the fact that he has made no appeal for help, and that he sends little news to the Indian Government, would seem to imply that he does not regard his condition as critical.

An Indian newspaper publishes a translation of a letter said to have been issued by the son of the late Mollah Muskhil Alam, inviting the tribesmen to join in a holy war against the Ameer. The letter describes Abdurrahman as a tyrant, aiming at his own advantage, and not at that of his subjects; and contrasts him with the late Ameer Shere Ali, who, it says, was a merciful man and careful of his subjects' interest.

BELOOCHISTAN.

Colonel Gatacre, Deputy Quartermaster-General, has lately completed his examination of the line on the new strategic road from Dera Ghazi Khan to Pishin. He reports no great engineering difficulties, except on a section of forty miles between Kingri and Mektar. Fuel, grass and water sufficient for military requirements can be obtained on the eastern sections, while in the Bori Valley supplies are abundant. Camels are easily obtainable in the Zhob Valley. The attitude of the tribes is friendly.

An inquiry lately held regarding the expenditure on the Quetta Railway shows the cost of the Hurnai line to be within General Browne's estimate.

MR. E. ST. J. FAIRMAN, for many years established in and connected with Egypt, Turkey, and Italy, has lately become a partner in the firm of Messrs. Jul Brett (of London and Paris), commission merchants, at Victoria Chambers, 55 and 56 Chancery-lane, London, W.C.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

PUBLIC OPINION.

(Pioneer.)

Sir Charles Aitchison's words to certain of the residents of Lahore assembled to bid him farewell contain wise counsel to the reflective portion of the Indian public. In recognising the value of public opinion and the importance of political associations, he endeavoured to bring home to his hearers the responsibility which should attach to collective expressions of the popular voice. "If it is incumbent on every individual who takes part in public affairs and endeavours to form or to guide public opinion, to see that his aims are high, his motives pure, his criticism just, and his motives calm and sincere, the obligation imposed on an Association is immeasurably greater, though the sense of the responsibility is often apt to be obscured or destroyed." These last words, however, are a practical admission of the weakness of the instrument to which Sir Charles Aitchison attaches in our opinion excessive importance. Political assemblies will not recognise their responsibilities, and what is more there is no way of enforcing the obligation. As long as the statesman listens to public opinion in the hope of wisely guiding it, no harm is done. But if his attitude is that of a man watching to see how the cat jumps or ready to count heads, then the whole notion of responsible Government is turned upside down. It is this that has brought popular government into such disrepute in Europe, and that threatens to paralyse the energies of modern States. In India popular government is exposed to an even more serious flaw, though to have noticed it would have put Sir Charles Aitchison entirely out of sympathy with the particular audience he was addressing. The flaw is that the self-constituted representatives of the public do not in any accurate way represent the public. Their education, their aspirations, and their personal ends are the artificial results of our rule, and have little in common with the sentiments of the masses in whose name they claim to speak. On no account would we wish to suppress or to discourage the growth of public opinion in this country. All we ask is that our rulers should not be terrified out of their common sense when they perceive it manifested, but should boldly face it, and ask for its credentials.

INDIAN ART.

(Englishman.)

The thought has struck a good many people who have given their attention to the subject that a considerable impulse might be given to the promotion of art in India if the authorities would completely overrun their way of encouraging it. One effect of the caste system has been to preserve the genius for art in certain groups of families, and to extinguish all tastes for it in the rest of the population. Hence have been handed down for generations the secrets of those marvellous productions in clay, wood, metal, and cotton, which are the wonder of Europe, but which are fast dying out under the levelling influence of modern civilisation. Now our "Departments" go to work to develop art by taking a youth whose forefathers have been accountants since the Aryan invasion, and offering him a grand prize to take lessons in modelling. He can give the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter in decimals, but the exact difference in shape between a cube and a globe does not strike his eye. However he is infinitely encouraged, and at length produces a shape, which is submitted to a distinguished architect or engineer. A year or two afterwards this official, rendered amiable by a notice in the Gazette, reports that the specimen is better than the average work of beginners in some art schools in England, but not as good as that in others. The boy gets his prize and is promoted. Meanwhile another boy presents himself and asks for bakhshish, showing a curious thing he has made of mud under a tree in his village. He is persuaded with offers of bakhshish to stay in the art-school and study. He stays, but soon gives it up, and is pronounced incapable. He can do wonders in spherical geometry and conic sections with a lump of clay, but cannot take in the simplest idea of straight lines and angles. He has begun with curved lines. He also prefers using his eyes on the lump in his hands to taking lessons in measurement, so he is offered good wages for the work he does, but is told he cannot be advanced in his art unless he qualifies for the Entrance examination. He lives to an old age, drawing ten rupees to the last, and blessing the Government for setting up art schools in his country. The attempt has been made times without number to induce Indian artisans to impart their secret to a class of students, but they will not do so. They are as proud of their caste as a Brahman is of his, and money cannot tempt them to make it common. But if a plan were devised for stealing an intellectual march on the sons of these geniuses in art, so as to expand their minds without taking them away from the hut which comprises their father's studio, it seems to us that more than one valuable secret, which are in danger of dying with the next generation, might be secured to civilisation.

INDIAN TEA IN FOREIGN MARKETS.

(Pioneer.)

In commenting on the development of India's foreign trade, we have several times taken occasion to notice the slow progress which Indian tea makes in foreign markets, and, judging from several letters which have of late appeared in the Calcutta Press, the planters seem at last to have awakened to the fact that they have by no means done all they could to push their products. The colonists are great tea drinkers; but although the importation of Indian tea into Australia increased slightly in 1885-86, the total amount is still a mere fraction of what it might be. In this view the suggestion of a South Sylhet planter that the Indian Tea Association should grant a subsidy for advertising purposes, and that the tea should be shipped direct by the producer deserves most careful consideration. The latter part of the suggestion is especially important, for its effect would be to prevent adulteration and eliminate the additional element of cost introduced by the profits of middlemen. Another suggestion which may be noticed is that an attempt to increase the sale of Indian tea among the Natives should be made by establishing a Joint Stock Company, composed of those interested in the tea industry, the object of which would be to distribute the commoner sorts of teas, made up in small packets, by means of agents appointed in all the Indian bazaars of importance. One point which no one appears to have noticed is that a large and continually growing market for tea exists in Persia, Afghanistan and Central Asia, and that this outlet has hardly been tapped as yet by the Indian merchants. The imports into India of tea from Japan, China and Java for transshipment up the Persian Gulf or despatch by rail to the North-West Frontier have increased within the last five years by 41 per cent., and amounted in 1885-86 to no less than four million pounds. Were the Indian growers to depute agents to visit the markets of Persia and Afghanistan and report on their capacities and requirements, it would almost certainly pay them.

THE SINS OF SIR GRANT DUFF.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The Madras papers have published the text of Lord Cross's despatch amending the decision of his predecessor upon the Crole-Sullivan case. The substance of them has been known in India for some weeks. Mr. Crole gets his pay for the period of his suspension, and all the world recognizes that in this justice has been done tardily enough to a clever man and a valuable public servant who had certainly been very hardly treated. Lord Kimberley has lain under the imputation of having leaned a little too closely to the side of the Madras Government in the decision formulated last July, and indeed it is probably for that reason that his successor is careful to point out that his own decision is based upon evidence that was not in the possession of the Secretary of State last summer. This exonerates Lord Kimberley from much of the criticism that has been directed against the July despatch; but it leaves the Madras Government open to the suspicion of not having been as careful to bring the whole case before the Secretary of State as they should have been. Lord Cross finds that "three were more substantial grounds than were then known to exist for two of the charges made against Mr. Sullivan, and that Mr. Crole acted in accordance with his duty in bringing the facts to the knowledge of Government." By "known to exist" the India Office can scarcely mean in the knowledge of the Madras Government. At that time the whole of Mr. Crole's allegations were before them, and they had referred the papers to Mr. Handley, then an Acting Judge of the High Court. Once more then the good faith of Sir Grant Duff's Government is brought into controversy, and the question again resolves itself into one not so much of the conduct or misconduct of Mr. Crole—though Lord Cross makes reservations on that point—as the fairness with which the Madras Government stated a case in which they were so intimately concerned. Happily, however, the subject is only one of retrospective interest. Governments, like kings, never die; but no one would pretend that Mr. Bourke is in any other than a constructive sense the inheritor of Sir Grant Duff's responsibility, and we do not suppose that Mr. Crole's most impetuous champions would care to press for judgment and sentence upon the new Governor and his Council for the sins of his predecessor. We take it that Madras has heard more than enough of the Crole case, and that it will soon close with a sigh of weariness the volume even of Sir Grant Duff's transgressions.

Contributions to this already formidable volume are, however, still coming in. The latest of them, written in Madras and published in London, is entitled "A Black Quinquennium," and it purports to be a rejoinder to the famous "Review Minute" by which Sir Grant Duff vexed his critics and capivated unsophisticated writers in some of the London newspapers. The title is a little confusing. The Quinquennium, as students of the life and character of Nero may remember, was the period in which that little appreciated emperor, being under the influence of the irreproachable Seneca, walked uprightly and kept his hands from blood. A "Black Quinquennium" must, we fear, be understood to be the reverse of this. The writer evidently has in his mind a period in which nought but evil was done, in which a Sutherland played, in reverse, the part of a Seneca, and in which a Grant Duff avoided good as scrupulously as a Nero, in his good days, had avoided evil. It goes without saying that a pamphlet conceived in this idea must be little short of a caricature, and we do not know why a caricature even of Sir Grant Duff should be handed round under pretence of being serious writing. There is one excuse, and one only, for efforts such as this to keep the demerits of Sir Grant Duff's administration before the public. Sir Grant Duff himself so industriously keeps himself in evidence that he provokes those who do not admire him to ill-tempered and untimely expostulation. His two recent articles in the Contemporary Review, marked as they are with the fine self-consciousness which made his early contributions to universal knowledge quite peculiar to the member for the Elgin Burghs, are so magisterially composed that unless some one in India now and then comes in with a caution against accepting Sir Grant Duff as an infallible authority on Indian affairs, he may dangerously mislead public opinion at home. We have been somewhat disconcerted to see how his fine literary activities have lately been employed in the endeavour to persuade English people that what passes for the political life of Native India is all either sedition or nonsense, and that so much of it as is not put down with a high hand may be contemptuously ignored. Sir Grant Duff may be impatiently awaiting the day when his tormentors have become tired of worrying him. But those who keep on firing cannot complain if thearmistice is delayed. It will be better for him, and better perhaps, for Madras, when the warfare ceases; but he must show the way. Meantime, not much of good or of harm can come of a pamphlet which the title and the title-page at all events have conspired to make appear sensational. A writer who tells us that the denunciations of Sir Grant Duff's injustice and his cold-blooded misrule had for a long time been deafening in its unanimity obviously overshoots the mark. "Everywhere," we are told, "oppression and chaos reigned supreme, and while the weak were trampled on the wrongful acts of the strong were upheld." Somebody else from whom the writer quotes tells us that "he sat on us like the curse of some malevolent spirit."

BURMA A LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORSHIP.

(Rangoon Times.)

The North-Western Provinces have been granted a Legislative Council: there is no reason why this province should not be raised to the status of a lieutenant-governorship and given a council. From the expansion of her borders, the condition of her neighbours, the improved state of her own people, Burma is fully ripe for the measure advocated. More than a quarter of a century's rule and commerce have imparted some political and worldly education to the people of this country. More than a quarter of a century's peace and progress have prepared the way for the introduction of some measure of the sort we have so often advocated. We have no doubt that in the course of a few years at most the Punjab will be granted a local council of the same character as that of the North-Western Provinces and Bengal; and we do not see why Burma should not be treated in the same way. Raise the province to the condition of a lieutenant governorship by all means, but do not do so on the lines of Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab. Give us a council by all means, but not such as usually take their seat in Calcutta and Allahabad. The Lieutenant-Governor of this province should of course have a council; but the powers of both Governor and Council must be larger than those of similar authorities in India. It is true that in these days of steam and electricity time and pace are almost annihilated, and that responsibility need not be decentralized to any great extent. Nevertheless, a long arm of the sea does separate Burma from India, and from this fact alone greater responsibility must rest with the Chief of this province. The heads of the provinces of India can run down and see the Viceroy and hold personal converse with him on any emergency: the head of this province has not that advantage. To lay on him, therefore, larger responsibilities is a necessity, and must make it incumbent to give him greater authority with them. Central control there must be. So long as the Government of India continues to be what it is, so long must there be a supreme head, guiding, directing and controlling. No one would be bold enough, or silly enough to advocate, or even propose, entire decentralization of authority. Unity of administration must be preserved. War and diplomacy, the maintenance and management of such departments as the post-office, telegraph, railways, &c., must be looked after by a supreme head if their operations are to be of use and benefit to all alike. But for local purposes it will be necessary to grant the head of the united province of Burma larger powers and responsibilities, and therefore we say he should have a council to assist him. The Burma Council should not only be legislative but consultative. Each member of it should have a separate portfolio, with separate establishment. If anything, the financial and public works departments should be strongest.

BENGAL.

MESSRS. HOARE, MILLER, AND COMPANY will be strongly represented in the new Bengal-Nagpore Railway Company, as out of the six directors nominated three will be members of the above firm, Mr. Robert Miller being the agent and managing director.

THE Amrita Bazaar Patrika is kind enough to say that "Europeans are for humane treatment of criminals when they happen to be of their own race, and the Government is at once with them, but all their humanity oozes out if the criminals happen to be black instead of white."

THE announcement lately made that sanction had been accorded to the construction of the Chittagong Railway is, a Calcutta paper states, premature. The Chittagong line is one which, it is hoped, may be taken early in hand, but sanction has not been given to the scheme as yet, and the district must, meanwhile, perforce remain content with its existing imperfect system of communication with Bengal.

WITH the graceful tact that is its distinguishing feature the Hindu Patriot hints that the Mahomedans "on the frontiers of India are anxious for the advent of Russian rule." To this the Muslim Herald savagely retorts:—"It will be the men of the Patriot's stamp who would first go and fall at the feet of the Russians should they happen to come to India, and these will be the men who, in the hope of securing places for themselves, would conspire," &c., &c.

A CALCUTTA paper remarks that the statue of Sir Ashley Eden, which was unveiled recently by Sir Stuart Bayley, finds an appropriate place by the side of one of the finest of his public works. It is carved in marble—a fitting symbol of the mental strength and vigour of the man. And it is not a little remarkable that, where a pillar once marked the scene of a crime which threatened to extinguish the British dominion in Bengal, should now stand the effigy of one whose name will always be associated with perhaps the brightest chapter in the history of the peaceful development of our rule.

A CALCUTTA exporter criticises in the columns of a contemporary some of the statements and suggestions contained contained in Mr. Donald Smeaton's minute on the wheat trade. With regard to Mr. Smeaton's main proposal that wheat should be shipped in bulk instead of in bags, the correspondent says:—"Although the functions of a Director of Agriculture would appear to embrace the divination of the unuttered thoughts of the Marwari dealer, he is seemingly ignorant that such risks as 'sea-damage,' 'loss in weight,' 'heating' and 'discoloration' have to be taken into account by the exporter. I would, therefore, suggest, if Mr. Smeaton's proposal is to be taken in sober earnest, that he should, before pressing its adoption, endeavour to fix, with the definite exactitude characterising his other calculations, the margin which would protect the exporter against the above risks in the case of, say, a cargo of wheat shipped home via the Cape in bulk during a tropical rainy season. Unless such a margin compares more favourably than I am inclined to think with the estimated saving of Mr. Smeaton's plan, the manufacturers of 'B' gunny bags need fear little decrease in the consumption on this account." As to the admixture of dirt with exported wheat the writer contends that the London buyers, and not the Indian exporters, are chiefly responsible for the present condition of affairs; and in support of his contention he cites the following instance:—"Until within the last three or four years it was to the interest of Indian exporters to ship linseed as clean as possible, as, under the reciprocity clause then standing in the London contract, they were paid proportionately for an excess percentage of clean seeds in their shipments. With that extreme shrewdness which invariably defeats its own purpose, the home buyers, thinking to get frequently an involuntary gratuity from India, eliminated this clause, continuing to deduct for any deficiency, but ceasing to pay for any surplus of pure linseed. Immediately the margin of admixture in Calcutta was extended by one per cent. it became the exporter's interest to see that particularly clean parcels, which would otherwise have bestowed a bonus upon the London buyer, were mixed during shipment with dirtier ones to make an average, and, the spur of self-interest being abolished, Calcutta linseed has been allowed to steadily deteriorate so far as its average admixture is concerned." "Calcutta Exporter" asks who is to blame for this: the Natives, the exporters or the London buyers? He expresses an opinion that if London really desires clean Indian wheat she will get it by making up a standard containing not more than two per cent. of admixture and offering a proportionate price for it, penalising all shipments containing an admixture more than, say, one per cent. greater.

ANOTHER correspondent, writing to a Calcutta paper on the same subject, says:—"Before Mr. Smeaton elaborates his scheme for carrying grain in bulk by rail, it would be better to take a previous trip round the railway lines in the N.W. Provinces and Oudh, to see how railway platforms are prepared for receiving goods of a perishable nature. The Director of Agriculture should bear in mind that wheat exposed in this hot, humid climate is very liable to be attacked by weavils, and if hitherto the risk and losses arising from this source have been limited, it is chiefly owing to the custom adopted by the merchants of having grain packed in double bags. The proposal of having grain arriving in bulk stored, cleaned in a Calcutta depot, and poured into the ship's hold, is neither practical nor judicious, for the above reasons, and above all is prohibited under the rules of the Board of Trade for ships or steamers. Many years ago the grain from Russia and North America was carried in bulk, but the maritime losses became so large, the loss of human life assumed such proportions, that insurance offices and public feeling alike protested against it. The Parliamentary papers with reference to the 'Pliv soll' inquiry will afford a useful study on this subject."

MADRAS.

THE official report on the sowings of late indigo in the Madras Presidency shows that the total cultivation from April to the end of February this year amounted to 389,196 acres, against 267,044 in the corresponding period of the previous year.

THE question having been recently raised in Parliament as to why articles of indigenous manufacture, in lieu of imported ones, were not more largely availed of by the Superintendent of Army Clothing, Madras, as appeared from his annual indent on the Home Government, the Government of India have ordered that efforts should be made by all departments for further extending the purchase of indigenous manufactures in substitution of previously imported ones. A Madras paper states that, in the Southern Presidency, the contracts for the supply of articles of the former class are now in force to the extent of Rs. 93,938.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Madras Mail:—"In your issue of the 15th December last, you stated, upon the authority of the Times of India, that Messrs. Glover and Co. had 'entered into a provisional contract with the company that had been formed in England to carry out the work,' and that Mr. Thomas Glover had just arrived in Bombay." The negotiations referred to seem to have fallen through, and there is every probability of the work being undertaken by a French Company. It seems that, for some time past, the company has been looking out for better and cheaper terms than those offered by the Messrs. Glover and Co., and a few months ago it received a favourable offer from a Paris firm of contracting engineers of undoubted responsibility, energy and skill. Very little time was allowed to elapse after the formal discussion of preliminaries, which resulted in the French firm dispatching, at its own expense, an experienced engineer to India for the purpose of checking, on the spot, the Channel Company's surveys, plans, and estimates. Monsieur Poilly, the civil engineer delegated for this important work, arrived in Bombay by the last mail steamer, and is now in Pondicherry, from whence he starts for Paumben. Monsieur Poilly has had great and varied experience in canal works, having been one of M. de Lesseps's trusted lieutenants for many years in Egypt; he possesses also a fair knowledge of Indian work, having prepared the plans and made the surveys for the proposed Pondicherry Harbour and Docks, and he was, besides, the pioneer discoverer of the lignite at Bahour, which, it was expected, a couple of years ago, would do such great things for the capital of French India.

A CASE of human sacrifice is under magisterial investigation in the Tiruvadanai district of the Madras Presidency. The following are the circumstances of the case:—The daughter of one Santhian of the Pulla caste at Poolangudi was supposed to have been possessed with the devil, and to have remained barren in consequence. Kcdangikarers (exorcists) were consulted, and one among them, after invoking the devil, said that nothing short of a human sacrifice would be acceptable to the Demon, and, if that were offered, she would be relieved and become fruitful. The father accepted this revelation as inspired, and sought means to propitiate the devil. On a certain night, as previously arranged, the father, the exorcist, and five or six others met near a tank with toddy, cocoanuts, &c., to make the offering. The exorcist began with the poojah, burned incense, broke cocoanuts and uttered incantations, while two of them were sent to fetch the victim, one Savathi Udayan. On the arrival of Savathi, they retired to another side of the tank, where both toddy and arrack were given to him and to one Tuthukarupa Thaven. The unsuspecting victim Savathi drank freely of the fatal cup till he became as helpless as a child. The diabolic confederates caught him by the hair and threw him down, then another held him by the head, two more by his legs, and having thus secured him, one of the gang deliberately cut off his head. The blood was collected in a chatty and subsequently mixed with rice, and a few balls of this bloody mixture were thrown up into the sky for the mischievous deity. This done, they returned to the corpse, which they hacked in sundry places, to deceive appearance and to put the police on the wrong scent, threw it into the tank, naked, one of them having walked away with his cloth. The body was soon afterwards found floating in the tank. The police of Rajasing-amangalam conducted the investigation, and six persons have till now been arrested by them, two of whom have made a clean breast of the whole matter as above related.

On Thursday, the 14th April, Lady Susan Bourke had her first "at home" at Ootacamund, which was very well attended. Guests were received and presented in the house, and afterwards proceeded to the new tennis courts lately made in the grounds of Government House. The "at home" was very largely attended by residents and visitors from Madras and elsewhere.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR went out with the Ootacamund Hounds at their opening meet on Wednesday morning. The meet was very well attended. Among those present were H.H. the Maharajah of Mysore, General Faunce, Major Stewart-Mackenzie, Viscount Marsham, Captains Wyndham-Quin and Wingfield, the Rev. O. Dene, Mrs. and Miss Dene, Mr. and Lady Rosa Davy, Messrs. Liebenrood, Symons, Wisely, Yule Rees, Ivatt, and many others. Colonel Jago carries the horn as usual, assisted by Captain Wingfield, the Hon. C. White and Mr. Schmidt as usual.

BOMBAY.

MR. E. C. K. OLLIVANT'S re-appointment as Municipal Commissioner for Bombay is gazetted.

MR. A. W. CRAWLEY-BOEVEY'S appointment as Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate is gazetted.

SURGEON-MAJOR H. DE TATHAM, Civil Surgeon of Nassick, proceeds on furlough to Europe for one year on medical certificate.

IT is understood that the Hon. J. R. Naylor takes charge of the office of Chief Secretary to Government when Sir William Wedderburn, Bart., retires. Dr. Pollen will succeed Mr. Naylor. It is believed that Mr. Ranade will probably get the appointment held by Dr. Pollen.

MR. E. M. PRATT, Assistant Collector of Ahmednuggar, is allowed furlough, on medical certificate, for one year.

DURING Mr. T. H. Stewart's absence on leave Mr. E. C. Ozanne acts as Survey and Settlement Commissioner and Mr. J. A. Baines as Director of Agriculture.

A GANG of a dozen dacoits recently attacked and looted six villages in the Junner taluka, Poona. At the village Hatgaum the dacoits cut off the tips of the noses of the police patel's wife and daughter. A police party has been sent in pursuit of the offenders.

THE season reports of the Bombay Presidency for the past week show that there was rain in parts of Poona, Sholapur, Dharwar, Rutnagherry, Bijapur, and Belgaum. Harvest operations are still going on in some districts. Fever prevails in parts of seven, cattle-disease in parts of ten, small-pox in parts of four, and cholera in parts of three districts.

In commenting on the Hindoo lady's case the Statesman remarks that the Government of India has simply to bring the Indian law into conformity with the present English law, under which a suit for the enforcement of conjugal rights is simply a mode of dealing with the property of the married couple. "The custom of infant marriage in India makes the introduction into this country of the ancient ecclesiastical law of England, which we have ourselves abolished, a cruel absurdity. The course which the Government should take seems to be clear. It has simply to bring our Indian law into conformity with the present English law on the subject."

THE Lahore paper expresses its disapproval of the agitation in favour of the construction of the proposed railway from Hyderabad in Sind to Pachodra on the Jodhpore line, via Umarnkot. Our contemporary believes "that the country through which such a line must pass is scarcely sufficiently fertile to warrant the anticipation of a local traffic sufficient to pay a fair interest on the capital expended. The success of the line would, therefore, depend on the amount of through traffic which could be secured. Assuming that the engineering difficulties are inconsiderable—though this requires confirmation—and that the line would run in an almost direct line from Pachodra to Umarnkot, and from Umarnkot to Hyderabad, the distance from Jodhpur junction to Kurrachee would be only eighty miles shorter than that from Jodhpur junction to Bombay. The difficulty of ferrying goods across the Indus would more than counterbalance the advantages of the shorter route."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

MR. C. A. ROE officiates as Judge of the Punjab Chief Court, vice Mr. T. W. Smyth, proceeding on furlough.

FROM Peshawur it is reported that the Jagdalak route is quite open, thus showing that the Northern Ghilzais have not risen.

NEW coins are scarce in Northern India, says the Rawul Pindi paper. "To supply the want, however, it seems probable that some enterprising Native is doing a little minting of his own here, for we came across some short time ago a rupee carefully moulded in copper. The minter had been obliged to do the milling round the edge very coarsely, but the face and reverse were evidently moulded from a clear-cut rupee. There are also in circulation not a few silvered double pice."

DURING the proceedings of the sub-committee of the Public Service Commission at Allahabad on the 12th ult., the president, Sir Charles Turner, mentioned that it was proposed to abolish the Education Department so far as graded officers were concerned, and to offer such salaries as would induce the foremost men in England to take up professorships in India. The witnesses seemed to think that the experiment might very well be tried.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

FROM a paper published in a recent number of the Indian Medical Journal, it appears that, while fifteen members of the Medical Staff have earned the Victoria Cross, not one member of the Indian Medical Service have gained this distinction: each Service has approximately the same number of men. Four K.C.B.'s have been conferred on the Medical Staff; two on the Royal Naval Medical Service; and one on the Bengal Medical Service. While sixty honours have been conferred on members of the Medical Service, seventeen have been conferred on members of the R.N.M.S.; twenty on Bengal; ten on Madras; and three on Bombay doctors, up to the end of 1886.

H. Young, 17th Madras Infantry; Surgeon-Major W. E. Moylan, I.M.S.; Surgeon L. A. Waddell, I.M.S.; and Surgeon H. F. Burton, I.M.S. Surgeon J. P. Barry, I.M.S., has been permitted to proceed to Bombay and Matheran.

LIEUTENANT WALKER, 15th Madras Infantry, has been appointed Post Transport Officer at Myotha, vice Lieutenant Crea-lock, 2nd Somersetshire Regiment, returning to India.

THE Lahore paper understands that the commands in the new Sikh regiments fall to Colonel J. Cook, second in command of the 14th Sikhs; Colonel D. W. Inglis, of the 15th Sikhs; and, as already announced, Colonel V. Rivaz, now on leave. Captain H. R. L. Holmes, wing commander of the 45th Sikhs, is appointed second in command of the regiment under Colonel J. Cooke; and Major H. Howell, 1st Punjab Infantry, becomes also second in command of one of the new regiments. Colonel G. W. Channer, V.C., permanent commandant of the 14th Sikhs, and now acting Brigadier-General, Sealkote, reverts to his regiment.

THE appointment of Deputy Judge Advocate-General, 1st Circle, Madras, is to be abolished on the 1st of next month. Colonel Chaplin proceeds to Bangalore at the end of this month to relieve Colonel Shaw, and then the work of the 1st Circle will be distributed between the 2nd and 3rd, having their headquarters at Secunderabad and Bangalore respectively.

IN view of the probable casualties from sunstroke during the present hot season in Burma, the Government of India have wisely sanctioned the issue to British regiments of pith solah topis which are to be worn in place of the regulation helmet. Invalids this year will have the benefit of a hill sanatorium also, as a cantonment on the plateau of Imjok near the Ruby Mines is being laid out, and barracks are to be erected there.

IT has been decided to raise a police battalion of 500 men, together with the necessary complement of Native officers and non-commissioned officers, for service in the Kobo Valley and Upper Chindwin. The force will consist of volunteers from the 42nd and 44th Light Infantry, from the Frontier Police, and by newly-enlisted men, and will be composed of Assam Jhurwahs, Cacharis, Kukis, and other tribes. Lieutenant C. W. Harris, 4th Bengal Infantry, will command, and will, in addition to his pay, receive a staff allowance of Rs. 300 a month, to be raised to Rs. 400 on passing the colloquial test in Burmese. He will be seconded in his regiment for five years. The assistant commandant, who has yet to be named, will, in addition to his pay, receive a staff allowance of Rs. 200 a month, and to be raised to Rs. 250 on passing the colloquial test in Burmese: he will be seconded in his regiment for two years. The commandant appointed to this force has been ordered to proceed to Manipur and begin to raise and organise the force as expeditiously as possible, and on completing 200 men he will proceed direct to Upper Chindwin, leaving the assistant commandant to enlist the remaining 300 men.

IT is reported that the rifles of the 1st Battalion Leinster Regiment have been condemned as unfit for further service. The arms have been in use about fourteen years. It is said that the corps has been complaining of the Dum Dum ammunition as being the cause of their indifferent shooting, but the latter is, no doubt, attributable to the worn-out state of the rifles.

THE 2nd Hampshire Regiment left Mandalay on their return to India on the morning of the 2nd April. They left their lines on the morning of the 1st and embarked on the s.s. Mindoon. The bands of the Munster Fusiliers, Somerset L.I. and 14th M.I. played the regiment from their quarters through the city. This battalion which formed one of the original expeditions that advanced on Mandalay in the autumn of 1885 has since been employed in almost every part of Upper Burma. On the 31st ult., the battalion was drawn up under command of Major and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel Collins, for inspection by Major-General Sir G. White, V.C., K.C.B., Commanding Upper Burma Field Force. At the close of the inspection, the Major-General addressed the battalion in the following terms:—"Colonel Collins, Officers, Non-commissioned Officers and men of the Hampshire Regiment:—I have ordered you to parade as I wished to have an opportunity of expressing to you the high appreciation of H.E. the Commander in Chief in India, myself, and all the senior officers under whom you have served, of the loyal and good service you have rendered in this campaign. It has not been a campaign to test highly the fighting power of such a battalion as yours, but you have had much hard work, jungle-fighting, much hard marching and hard work generally. The death-rate, too, has been very high, as the monuments in that new, but already fully stocked graveyard show; and those you leave behind you there have given their lives as truly in the cause of their country as if they had been shot down in action. It is not the first time I have met this battalion on active service. I look back with pleasure to having been associated with it in the advance on Cabul in 1879, and am glad to be able to testify that the fine spirit and soldierlike bearing so characteristic of the old 67th Regiment has in nowise deteriorated in the 2nd Hampshire Regiment. I wish you a prosperous voyage to India, and what, no doubt, you all look forward to more, a happy return to your homes in England, and I have no doubt that your reception in the old Cathedral city of your native country will be as distinguished and as honourable as the chapter you have added in Burma to the records of the county regiment."

DURING the collection of Jubilee subscriptions in Madras, the Paymaster of Pensioners at Nellore and Chittoor in the exuberance of his loyalty, levied a rupee from each pensioner, who paid it under the impression that they were asked to do so by an order of Government. Some paid under a protest, and others again voluntarily under a mistaken impression. The matter having been brought to the notice of the Superintendent of Family Payments and Pensions, that officer, under instructions from Government, proceeded to those places, investigated the case, and found that it was so. Government have now ordered a refund of one rupee to every pensioner who was deprived of his money.

THE Church Missionary Society are, it is stated, arranging for a Mission of inspection to the Native Christian communities in India and Ceylon during next cold weather. The Mission is to consist of ten members: five clergymen and five laymen. One of the latter held, not so very long since, high military rank out there. The Mission, according to present arrangements, will leave England next October and spend four months in the country, during which time they will travel in pairs, and will visit every Mission station in the five districts into which the area to be covered will be divided. The idea is said to have originated with Major-General Haig, the object of the visit being to raise the tone of the spiritual life in Native pastors and congregations. The cost is estimated at £2,000, towards which £800 have already been subscribed.

A SCANDAL IN BURMA.—The Rangoon Gazette learns from Akyab that complaints are loud and numerous against the action of the Civil Surgeon in having a case of small-pox, which had occurred on a steamer on the day of her arrival from Bombay, conveyed ashore into the General Hospital, in defiance of all rules and regulations of the port on the subject of infectious diseases, and at the risk of the health of the inhabitants of the town. The unfortunate seaman's subsequent destination was a shed away from all observation, where he died on the 17th, or five days after the ship's arrival in port. His death has been attributed to neglect both in his treatment and nursing, and this is about to form the subject of inquiry. It is stated that when the chaplain visited him on the day of his death—not having had any previous intimation—the unfortunate man was lying in a state of almost perfect nudity on a bed, with a piece of hard dried bread by his side, and a coolie who was supposed to be watching him, perched on the ground about ten yards' distant. The public naturally demand a strict inquiry.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

CAPTAIN TRAFALGAR.*

Works of thrilling adventure in this, the nineteenth century of grace, seem the birthright and heritage of the youth of the land. They are to be counted not by ones or twos, not even by tens and twenties, but by hundreds. Yet, withal, it may be doubted whether any of this huge mass surpass in interest or excitement "Captain Trafalgar," the charm of which is that the dangers and difficulties to be encountered are so natural that they occasion no surprise. The reader's hair is standing on an end before he scarce realises that there is aught to arouse alarm or create fear. Hair-breadth escapes there are to any extent; perils of land, perils of sea, perils of the bullet, perils of the knife, perils of fire, perils of water, perils of wealth, perils of poverty. And not once is the "situation" forced or strained. All seems to flow as plainly and simply as the veriest tale of childhood's years.

Does the reader want heroism? There is an abundant supply. The sober courage of age joins hands with the more inconsiderate pluck of youth. Frail children attract admiration for their daring and devilry where their elders would have displayed the impotence of despair. Delicate maidens share the hardships of fatigue and exposure; they face death without the quiver of a muscle, and prepare for their fate with cheeks unblanched with fear. Is villainy the order of the day? There is the mulatto, Vic Lubin, a mean, revengeful, cunning plotter and intriguer, one of those pariahs of humanity from which all that is noble and generous in the human breast recoils with loathing and disgust. There is the leader of the mutineers, who, to retaliate for petty grievances, betook himself to murder, robbery, arson, and the suchlike, and joined the hand of fellowship with others more wicked than himself.

Then there is the comic element in the narrative in the person of a chevalier and his cat—inseparable companions in travel—a simple-hearted and open-mouthed specimen of humanity, the indiscretion of whose tongue occasioned many of the troubles and difficulties in which the volume abounds.

What the tale is would be "tellings" to proclaim; but we promise that no boy will regret an hour or two spent with "Captain Trafalgar." Nor do we think the elder portion of society will have much fault to find with a work which is sensational and yet unartificial, and which brings nature to the help of man in working out the plot of the story. It would scarcely be fair to omit a tribute of praise to the translator, who has succeeded so admirably in "Anglicising" the original French in which the work was penned, that we had almost omitted to remember that there was any "adaptation" in the matter.

INDIAN USAGE AND JUDGE-MADE LAW IN MADRAS†

Travellers at times narrate how, now and again, they have witnessed, with fear and trembling, a combat between the monarchs of the woods; how all nature seems to stand aghast at a struggle, accompanied by roars and moans which resounded throughout the forests, and filled with alarm alike the birds of the air and the beasts of the field. Equally terrible is the encounter between two such combatants as Mr. Justice Innes, of the Madras High Court, and Mr. Nelson, a judge of local celebrity and fame. Who dare approach when the fight is at its height? Who dare interfere to settle the difference between two such adversaries?

What is the matter in dispute? The charge which the one adduces and the other rebuts is that "usage" in the "berighted" Presidency is practically ignored, and in its place is set up "positive law," which is made applicable to every conceivable case, with a result that local custom is set aside, and the people are "civilised" according to the notions of "judge-made" enlightenment. "I have no hesitation in affirming," says Mr. Nelson, "that at the present moment, in consequence of endless conflicting and unsatisfactory judgments of the Madras High Court, it is impossible (or very difficult) in any disputed case to guess what may be the ultimate decision upon what to the un instructed lay mind would seem to be the simplest possible questions of Hindu law." Mr. Innes, on the other hand, inclines to the view that "to adopt Mr. Nelson's suggestions, whether as regards the higher or lower castes, would commit us to chaos in the matter of the Hindu law we are now called on to administer. What is contemplated would result in our abdicating the vantage ground we have occupied for nearly a century, in which, if we continue to hold it, we may hope to remove the differentiations of customary law, and bring about a certain amount of manageable uniformity."

It is not possible for an outsider to settle such a neat little quarrel by the ipse dixit of a reviewer, and it must be left to the individual judgment of each reader to form an opinion on this vexed and knotty question. Not improbably, however, the matter is one of degree.

* "Captain Trafalgar." Translated from the French of André Laurie by William Westall. (Cassell and Co.)

† "Indian Usage and Judge-made Law in Madras." By J. H. Nelson. (Kegan Paul, Trench and Co.)

To ignore "custom and usage" entirely would be utterly indefensible; but it is conceivable that there may be cases when it would be neither practicable nor desirable to recognise local peculiarities. It must not be overlooked, for instance, that Mr. Nelson's arguments, if pushed to their logical conclusion, would have compelled the British Courts of Justice in the earlier years of this century to have recognised Sutte, and, perhaps, even Thuggee, both of them institutions supported by the traditions of the country, and yet both of them so entirely opposed to the true welfare of the people that no governing power with any pretensions to civilisation could have extended to them patronage and support.

That Mr. Nelson's work is able is undeniable; that it may lead to the investigation of a momentous but intricate question is possibly the only reward which its talented author can hope or expect to receive.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.*

We are glad to see in this issue a reprint of the second annual report of Lady Dufferin's Fund, the contributions to which fall lamentably short of the urgency of the need for the female medical attendance in Zenanas, which it is the object of the Fund to supply. It is well remarked, that many persons, "interested in the success of the movement, and who are ready and willing to give from Rs. 1 to Rs. 5, forget that how valuable their small donation would be, and omit to send it." Yet a steady inflow of subscriptions—we may call them "middle-class subscriptions"—would, if once assured, be the very backbone of the undertaking.

The latest correspondence on the anxiously-debated case of Rukhmabai had not been published when this number was sent to press. Most fully convinced of the justice of the lady's contention, we should think it more than doubtful whether the Privy Council will decide that she must comply with a statute now abolished in England, and which was, during its existence here, extended to India by judge-made law alone. By this the Privy Council are no wise bound. In these circumstances, they should have free hand. But, if a precedent be needed, let them make one; if, in default of doing so, and contrary to humanity and to common-sense, they reject Rukhmabai's appeal, and subject her to even the possible risk of imprisonment, people will be sorely tempted to ask, A quoi bon, the Privy Council as a Court of Final Appeal?

Dr. Francis, continuing his interesting paper on Social Life in India, rightly refers to Zenana life as a chief barrier against social intercourse between Europeans and Hindus, and to the visits to England of Native gentlemen as a means of promoting such intercourse; which, as he justly remarks, almost using the language which we, not long ago felt compelled to employ, "is for the most part on the surface; there is little heart in it."

Mr. St. A. St. John concludes with a very neat rendering of some Burmese poetry, his intelligent version of the Burmese Hitopadesa; and the way is made easier to Native students intending to enter at Oxford by a clear statement of the special advantages offered to them as to the length of residence required in order to take the degree of B.A.

THE CENTURY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

"The Century Illustrated Magazine" is not, perhaps, quite so interesting as usual; but all the articles are worthy of perusal, and if the readers are extra fastidious, it is mainly owing to the high standard of criticism which the invariable excellence of this magazine has created.

WALFORD'S ANTIQUARIAN.

"Walford's Antiquarian" is specially good this month. "Book-selling in Little Britain" draws attention to a part of London "now best remembered as a bygone home and haunt of book-sellers and authors." But one person in a hundred, we make bold to assert, knows the origin of the name, and not many habits of the metropolis could say where the locality is situate; so Mr. Roberts' article should find many readers. The "Kabahal" imparts interest to a subject but little studied; while a very appreciative review of Mr. Payne's translation of Boccaccio sings the praises alike of the great Italian "Storyist," and of the translator who has introduced him to the English public.

The Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for the current month contains a "Short Chapter on very early Anglo-Indian History," by Colonel S. Rivett-Carnac, which may furnish some readers with historical information regarding the first discoveries of European voyagers to the East which is new to them. A paper on "Ancient Telegraphy," by Andrew T. Sibbald, is interesting and instructive. Captain A. B. Williams gives suggestions for a very simple and seemingly effective plan for supplying cartridges for the fighting line—an ever-recurring difficulty in action. He is evidently not in favour of repeating rifles for all the army, holding that the Martini-Henry can be loaded and fired rapidly enough; and he questions, as do many others, whether a repeating rifle might not inspire "false confidence, wild firing, and increased unsteadiness." Mr. R. O'Byrne continues his very useful compilation concerning the interior economy of the Royal Navy from the accession of Her Majesty. Mr. Colquhoun's story, "Every inch a Soldier," progresses well, and the chatty paragraphs of "Furlough" wind up the contents of a very readable number of this well-edited and deservedly-popular Service magazine.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for May continues to hold the good position which it has won for itself in the Services. Amongst the professional papers is a continuation of Captain Gall's carefully thought out views on "Modern Tactics," and some "Rough Notes on a New Form of Attack," by Lieut.-Colonel Babington—both papers having explanatory illustrations. A continuation of General Mitford's journey, profusely illustrated by himself, is still pleasant reading. The story of the "Old 90th Light Infantry and its Heroes" is a welcome addition to an excellent number, and if followed by similar reminiscences of other corps, the magazine ought to be in demand amongst many retired officers as well as it is now in all mess-rooms. "Our Land Transport at Home" is a very instructive paper, which will well repay perusal. Besides the continuation of his illustrated notes on "The Early English Army," the Editor contributes an exceedingly appreciative notice of the philanthropic career of that excellent lady the late Viscountess Strangford, whom he justly styles "the friend of sick and wounded soldiers and sailors."

NEW MUSIC.

"The Crew," words by T. Murray Ford, music by Charles Vincent (National Music Company).—"The Crew" is a thoroughly nautical song as regards the words of the song and the music to which they are set. It reminds us in places of some of Dibdin's compositions.

"Erin, Arouse Thee," words by T. Murray Ford, music by H. Lawrence Harris (Music Hall Artistes Publishing Company).—A patriotic song, which we commend to the notice of Mr. Parnell. The music is dignified, simple, and well adapted for loyal entertainments.

"Golden Hair Waltz," by C. E. Kettle (National Music Company).—This is a most effective waltz; the two variations in the minor key are particularly sweet and delicate, and everywhere the music is danceable.

"Our Soldiers," by S. W. Carlyle (Music Hall Artistes Publishing Company).—The music of this song is particularly attractive, but the words savour somewhat of clap-trap, since in these days the private does get his meed of praise after the battle.

"The Foemen's Flags Were Flying," words by T. Murray Ford, music by George Parker (Harris and Co., 2, Broad-street Buildings).—A thoroughly martial song, with a good chorus. It is sure to be popular.

"The Wreck of Mary Jane," by Frank Butler (Harris and Co.).—Well conceived, and in parts pathetic. We have yet fault to find, inasmuch as pages four and five are printed upside down!

"Polly the Slavey," words by Carrol Clyde, music by John Millard (Music Hall Artistes Publishing Company).—This is a first-rate comic song, which is sure to bring down the house. The chorus is smart, rattling, and funny.

"The Creation," words by Wynne Britton, music by Frederick Croft (Harris and Co.).—A simple, unpretentious song, easy and fairly attractive. Its name is, perhaps, unfortunate, as suggesting a comparison in which Haydn would not appear to disadvantage.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Australian Defences and New Guinea," by Sir Peter Scratchley (Macmillan and Co.); "Our Sovereign Lady," by L. E. O'R. (Nisbet and Co.); "Shooting and Yachting in the Mediterranean," by A. G. Bagot (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Indian Magazine;" "The Buchholz Family" (Part 2), (George Bell and Sons); "Geography of the Malay Peninsula," by Professor A. H. Kean (Stanford).

RUMOURS AND THEIR RESULTS.—The Dainik, a native paper of Bengal, says:—"It is rumoured that the Russians will soon demand the countries on the border of the Oxus. It is said that Russia has made a secret alliance with China, but for what purpose is not yet known. We heartily wish that the English may get rid of this danger. But it is a matter for deep regret that by their action they are bringing dangers on themselves. If they strengthen India by introducing a better policy, and thereby securing the heart of the people, this fear may easily be removed. But they are acting in a manner which will put them in difficulties. God alone knows what the result will be. We are apprehensive of the future."

SIR EDWARD BRADFORD.—Among the various departures of the season that of Colonel Sir Edward Bradford, who recently left Bombay, deserves notice. It has been deeply felt in Rajputana, whose chiefs and clans and old border frays have been compared with those of ancient Highland story, and where—to complete the resemblance—superstition and alcohol by turns depress and reanimate the energies of the lords of the soil. In such a country the Government have always felt that the Agent to the Governor-General should have, if not local experience, or least a personality strong in knowledge of men, and sympathy with diverse feelings rather than in lessons of administration, and the lore acquired from blue-books. When Major Bradford was appointed to this high office nine years ago, those who had only heard of him as a good cavalry and political officer were a little surprised, considering the usual course of promotion and the competition for such a prize; but the men who knew felt that the Viceroy's selection would be justified. They were aware that for some years, special opportunities of seeing and hearing about the affairs of the Foreign Office had been enjoyed by the officer then at the head of the Thuggee and Dacoity Department, and that more than one Viceroy had a high opinion of his judgment and discretion, apart from the admiration his personal character commanded. No doubt gifts of nature brought many a breeze to swell the sails of fortune; a manner of singular charm and a surpassing courtesy to all are not less agreeable in high places than to society at large, but the qualities which keep friends and bind regard lie deeper, and there are now few persons in Rajputana, or indeed in a wider sphere, who do not recognise that manliness, courage, honour, unfailing sympathy and unselfishness have really endeared to them as a friend the man who has ruled and advised so well in the position once adorned by Sir Henry Lawrence. He leaves his Province loyal and contented; with many a difficulty removed during his tenure of office which less skilful hands would have aggravated; with a reputation for general ability and knowledge which is sure to be of weight at the India Office, where as Political Secretary he will be of great value to India; with friends of all creeds and colours, and in numbers such as are given to few, regretting his departure. The drop of comfort in the local cup is that Colonel Walter who succeeds Sir Edward Bradford as Agent to the Governor-General, having on two previous occasions officiated in that capacity for some time, knows Rajputana thoroughly, is penetrated with the genius loci, and commands much influence and respect among all classes.—Pioneer.

THE directors of the Hyderabad—Deccan—Company, Limited, have published a most interesting report, which is conclusive of the exceptional value of the report on the Singareni Coalfield. Dr. King, of the Geological Survey of India, was the original discoverer of the field, and a thorough survey and examination was instituted by the Nizam's Government. The coal measures are well defined, and occupy a narrow band of ground which may be roughly expressed at eight miles in length and nearly two miles in breadth. The most permanent of the beds of coal is the upper one, known as "King's Seam." It is 7ft. in thickness. The bottom seam is also persistent, and it is roughly taken at 20ft. in thickness. The productive area, on the lowest computation, is six square miles, and the estimate is that the total deposit is at least 150,000,000 tons, from which, if two-fifths be deducted for waste, there will remain 94,000,000 tons available for sale. This quantity, at the anticipated rate of consumption of 200,000 tons per annum, implies a life of nearly 500 years for the coalfield. The entire series of coal measures is within easy reach of the surface. The field is beyond the reach of detrimental competition, and it can claim the advantage of an assured consumption of 180,000 tons per annum.

THE seat in the Court of Directors of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Ludwig Wiese, will be filled by Mr. John Howard Gwyther, who retains his position as manager of the bank.

INDIAN GOLD FIELDS.—Nine Reefs, Goldfields of Mysore, Colar Centralis, Balaghat, and Indian Consolidated have been strong under the influence of favourable reports from the mines. In a new winze, which is being sunk at the 205 ft. level in the Balaghat, the lode assays over 3 oz. to the ton, and in the old workings patches of quartz are being discovered which run from 5 dwts. to over an ounce per ton. In the Goldfields of Mysore prospecting shafts are being sunk with great energy, and as the ground is known to be intersected with lodes, which are being actually worked in adjoining properties, valuable discoveries may be made any day. It is only a question of time when this great extent of auriferous ground will have several important mines located on it. For a speculative purchase, all Indian gold shares are more tempting now than at any previous period in their history, because not only have they several years substantial progress at their back, but they are considerably under their average level of price. Any good discovery among them would now have twice as much effect as when prices were high. There would be a sharper rush into them, and a bigger profit for early buyers.—Financial News

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 9, 1887.

NEWS FROM AFGHANISTAN.

THE old story, which it is said once thrilled the British public with horror and indignation, of the "ferocious Dhoolies" coming upon the field of battle and carrying off the wounded, seems likely to have some imitable successors. The story, whether true or not, was a good one, as illustrating the profundity of the ignorance of the British public regarding India at a time (that of the Mutiny) when India was supposed to be in every Englishman's thoughts. To-day a better knowledge of Indian affairs apparently prevails; journalists and writers of all sorts discuss with the equanimity of self-enlightenment all questions political, economical, social, or military concerning our Eastern Empire. To slightly misquote, "they talk as familiarly of Indian lions as maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs." The canine knowledge possessed by the young ladies to whom Shakespeare refers was, perhaps, somewhat superficial, but this did not limit their conversation. So with regard to the gentlemen of the Press who so glibly write and comment upon Indian affairs and Afghan politics. Ignorance of names, places, or events do not stand in the way of their telling the British public what ought to be done in order to protect India from immediate invasion, or to save Afghanistan from impending anarchy. One journalist, after mentioning the distressing intelligence that the "Talmuds" had rebelled, and had taken arms against the Ameer, proceeds to discourse most earnestly upon the gravity of the situation. The tribe referred to, unknown to any traveller outside of the editorial sanctum, is declared to be a very powerful one, and the consequences of its success are pointed out. Of course, the only disturbance which ought to follow upon the perusal of such a discourse is a disturbance of the gravity of every reader who knows anything of Afghanistan and its peoples; but, unfortunately, the mischief is greater. Other journalists take up the parable, and write of other tribes equally unknown combining to overthrow the Ameer's authority. In confusion of names and things the "ferocious Dhoolies" are nowhere in the new light of Oriental knowledge. Of course the original inspiration comes itself from the East, generally in the shape of a Press telegram, which mentions that the news has arrived at Peshawur or Simla—the telegraph, perhaps, being responsible for the spelling of Native names when the message reaches London. But even when one of such names is correctly given, be it that of a place or a tribe, the ignorance remains, but it does not hinder the commentator's pen. For instance, nearly every London newspaper last week gave its readers to understand that the "Shinwaris" had taken the Khyber Pass and defeated the Ameer's troops. It is not, of course, to be expected that all the gentlemen of the Press here should know that that the Shainwaris are merely one of the Khaibari tribes who inhabit the mountainous district in the vicinity of the Pass, and that they are, so far as numbers and arms go, utterly incapable of standing before any regular force of the Ameer's army, but it is strange that the Saturday Review, which sometimes shows very correct knowledge of Indian matters, should write last Saturday that "the occupation of the Khyber Pass by the Shinwarris and their alleged victory over the Ameer's troops may be mere passing incidents in the struggle, but they show that Abdur Rahman is at the best fighting on equal terms with his enemies." That there may have been a row between some of the tribe and some of the Ameer's irregulars is likely enough, but the idea of the Ameer being only able to hold his own against such foes is ridiculous in the extreme. But the persistency with which this story of the taking of the Khyber Pass and the overthrow of the Ameer's army was repeated throughout the Press caused the question to be asked in Parliament if there were any confirmation of the news by the Viceroy of India. Of course the answer was in the negative. "Viscount Cross stated that all reports concerning disturbances in Afghanistan were to be distrusted unless authenticated by the Viceroy. Many mischievous reports had been circulated, and many of them had turned out to be absolutely untrue. The Viceroy was in constant communication by telegraph with the India Office, and whenever anything important took place he invariably sent word the moment he heard of it." It might be thought that this very clear and explicit assurance would allay Stock Exchange and other anxieties regarding disturbances in Afghanistan, but not so. The panic-mongers will have their way, and so the alarms continue to disturb and distract the attention of the nervous. All officers who have served on the North-West Frontier of India know well how Afghanistan news is manufactured for the English Press, both in India and at home. It is done chiefly in the Peshawar bazaars, in which are always congregated a motley and filthy horde of Afridis, Afghans, Cabulees, and itinerant merchants from Central Asia. These gentlemen are ever ready to give information to the Native newswriters employed by the Anglo-Indian Press at a few rupees a month, and whose valuable collection of bazaar gup appears as "Latest intelligence from Afghanistan. From our special correspondents." These "specials" long ago came to understand that Englishmen like sensational news, and especially that which tells of Russian intrigues or Russian encroachments. We have educated the people of India into the belief that we are in hourly dread of Russia. News that will add to this effect the gentlemen of the Press in the Peshawur bazaars know will always be acceptable to their employers. They therefore ask the Afghan marauder or Cabul grape and date seller to supply them with it, and these amiable folk do so willingly and without stint. This is how two-thirds of the "news from Afghanistan" used to be manufactured for the Indian Press, from which Kenter took it and telegraphed it to England. We are writing of our own experience of some years ago, but the Afghan "news" now is very like what it used to be then. Even the Viceroy at the time we are writing of had no little difficulty in obtaining correct information, notwithstanding that the Government had a trusted and confidential Native agent in Cabul. He did not always, for he dared not, write the truth. Matters are, of course, on a much more satisfactory footing now, but only so far as the news received by the Government of India is concerned. The intelligence which the Press tries to get honestly and directly for itself, and which is telegraphed immediately to England, is still most untrustworthy and unreliable. But as the British public likes sensational news of an alarming character, while the demand exists the supply will no doubt continue.

THE TASMANIA.

TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LONDON.

The undermentioned passengers of the s.s. Tasmania, wishing to place on record their appreciation of the conduct and services of the chief officer, Mr. W. J. Watkins, under the trying circumstances attending the wreck of the Tasmania on the 17th April, 1887, have the honour to request that the directors of the P. and O. Steam Navigation Company will do them the favour of communicating the contents of this memorial to the officer in question.

The undersigned will ever bear in mind the coolness Mr. Watkins displayed in the time of danger, and the undeviating courtesy he showed throughout to all.

Signed on board the s.s. Chusan, at sea, 20th April, 1887.

Signatures:—Geo. W. Allen, Charles Bill, H. W. Bliss, W. A. Browne, Colonel E. R. C. Bradford, Buckinghamshire, Major Hillyard A. Cameron (Bedford Regiment), James Bradford, W. J. Cunningham, Herbert Easton, Eug. Gallois, T. W. Grant, R. Hadenfeldt, G. E. Hale, J. H. Mackay, Colonel E. Osirehan, James Phillips, Lieut.-General W. W. Gool-fellow (R.L.), W. Duff Bruce, Surgeon-Major W. F. Bennett (Medical Staff), Surgeon-Major Lindsay Carte (Medical Staff), H. I. Chope, Alexr. Campbell, Major N. Cooper, John Griffiths, E. B. Harris, H. N. Harris, Andrew F. Ker, Lieut. W. Ledsham, Herbert B. Montefiore, Oscar Oertel, A. Poole, M. Bernhardt, W. Pigott, L. E. D. Rose, G. W. Roughton, J. H. D. Ryder, R. H. Story, G. S. Sutherland, James Walker, James White (B.C.S.), Bradford Leslie, A. F. Barry, V. Pont, H. A. Richardson, Rev. J. Robertson, T. H. Stewart, R. H. Strand, and C. Vowell.

Replying to a letter Mr. Bethune, secretary to the P. and O. Company, writes:—There are two observations which I think it necessary to make. First—The commander of the vessel, Capt. Perrins, of whom the writer speaks as a man apparently incapable of performing his duty on account of long service and infirmity, was fifty-three years of age, and was at the moment of this disaster one of the most trusted captains in the service. He had held that position for twenty years, and throughout the whole period had not once incurred the disapproval of the Board for any act or omission in the performance of his duty. Secondly—That the Company, being exclusively their own underwriters, have the foremost interest in providing the most skilled commanders and officers, and the best crews (for the particular work which their ships have to do), and that the commanders and officers in the Company's service are more liberally paid than in any other employ throughout the mercantile marine of this or any other country. The loss of this fine vessel is a disaster to the Company of serious magnitude, and there is only one consolatory circumstance in the affair—that while the captain and an officer and many of the crew have lost their lives, the passengers have all happily been saved.

A letter has been addressed to Lord Salisbury as Foreign Secretary, signed by 101 passengers of the Tasmania, in which they make a special appeal to the Government. The following are extracts:—A large number of the crew and passengers, including all the women and children on board except two, to the total number of above ninety, were landed at Roccapini Cove and on the adjacent coast; many were but scantily clothed and without shoes; all were drenched to the skin, cold, and in misery. The people of the neighbourhood were poor, but out of their poverty they gave what they could, both of food and clothing, and gave willingly and without seeking for payment. It is quite impossible for us individually to convey to the officials and people of Corsica, to whom our thanks are due, our sense of their courtesy and kindness; nor if we could do so could we do so adequately, for their kindness was not to us alone, but to the British nation, whom they befriended in our persons. We venture, therefore, respectfully to approach your lordship with the request that Her Majesty's Government will be pleased to accord such official recognition as they may deem fit to the exceptional courtesy and kindness with which we were treated by all the Corsicans, officials and private persons, with whom we were brought into contact.

Salvage operations are being actively prosecuted at the wreck of the Tasmania, and it is expected that a considerable portion of the cargo, as well as the passengers' belongings, will be recovered.

"THE GREATEST TEA MERCHANT."

Under this heading our Parisian contemporary, the Gaulois, has the following delicious morsel, which is really too exquisite for its fragrance not to be wafted abroad. It requires no comment from us. We only pity M. Molchanoff for the position the reporter puts him into:—

"M. J. M. Molchanoff has been in Paris for some days. And first, who is M. Molchanoff? Simply the richest tea merchant there is in the world; his fortune may be valued at thirty millions of roubles. A nice figure. At Hankoi, in China, M. Molchanoff tastes, from morning to evening, the innumerable quantities which are brought to him from all the provinces of the Celestial Empire. He steeps a handful of the plant in boiling water and carries it to his lips. The result is that at the end of several hours of this exercise the tongue becomes entirely tanned, and it becomes necessary to restore the natural sensitiveness by scraping it with a knife. Shortly, when one has tasted tea during several years, the nerves of the eye become fatigued, and a partial blindness follows. This is the case with M. Molchanoff, who is being treated at this moment in Paris by M. Galezowski, the celebrated oculist, and by Dr. Charcot. We yesterday saw M. Molchanoff at the Grand Hotel, where he has descended. He is a man of about fifty years, with a vigorous aspect. His brusque frankness, and the laissezaller of his manner, are those of an enterprising man. In spite of all, he has lost nothing during his long stay in China of European manners. He lives as a lord, in an omnipotence which recalls the best times of feudalism, at Hankoi, this village of two millions and a half of inhabitants. A strange town, where every evening about nine o'clock there is no one any longer in the streets besides the dogs, who act as police. Woe to the stranger who ventures in the town after the curfew; he would be devoured. His neighbour, a Chinese merchant, has six millions of bonds; often he invites to his table the hundred and twenty Europeans of Hankoi, and serves them with a feast which costs thirty louis a-head. At these dinners from a hundred to a hundred and twenty courses are served, of which several are composed of moss gathered in Mongolia or on the Himalayas, costing very dear (les yeux de la tête). This Lucullus has a grade in Mandarin which is superior to that of the Governor of the Province, but he is careful not to carry each day the insignia, because his fellow citizens look with a jealous eye on a merchant to whom should be rendered greater honours than those reserved for their Governor. There, at Hankoi, is complete liberty, M. Molchanoff tells us; liberty of the Press, liberty of commerce, security for strangers.

It is nearly twenty-five years since M. Molchanoff disembarked at Hankoi for the first time. Possessor of several millions of roubles, he looked out to see how he could employ his peculium and utilise his commercial intelligence. The hesitation was of short duration; the tea merchant seemed to present chances of success: he consecrated himself to it entirely. The house of Piatkoff, Molchanoff and Co. was founded. Five years afterwards M. Menetino, a young engineer, came to study in China the customs which were unknown to him; chance brought him to the presence of M. Molchanoff, who engaged him. The rich tea merchant told us the manifestations which were produced when the news of the commencement of hostilities in Tong-King was known. There were troubles in the street, noisy promenades in the towns, threats of death proffered to Europeans, and as the trouble advanced, triumphantly, M. Molchanoff walked out, tranquil, in the midst of the disturbers, applying himself to protect our nationals. What he would value would be to be nominated, later on, Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. How are we to explain the sympathy of the Celestials for the tea merchant? The reason is simple. A law in the Middle Kingdom prohibits the cultivation of tea by Europeans. On the contrary, the Chinese, ignorant of commercial transactions, cannot be the intermediaries between the consumer and the producer. Therefore they venerate men like M. Molchanoff, who have representatives in all the towns of Europe, and who thus cause tea to be produced in all the provinces of China. They cause to live, on all the large extents of territory, innumerable quantities of Chinese, who are careful de se mettre en grève. However, secret societies are numerous in China. Under different names they propagate the doctrines of socialism, anarchy, and collectivism. And Basly, Joffrin, who believe themselves to be discoverers! Nothing new under the sun.

The English—extraordinary thing—buy the teas of inferior quality, and they only rarely taste the famous caravan tea. In the United Kingdom, this country of all comforts, one wishes, before all, not to pay too dearly. Central Asia and Siberia consume the tea in bricks and tablets, (which are) more easily transportable for the nomad populations. In France we have the tea in powder, the conyou-thé. An anecdote to finish. The Chinese have a sort of communal autonomy. The governor of a town, of a canton, buys his post from the sovereign, provided that he has the right to impose on his subordinates. It is a means to regain his money. But, by a just alternative, the Chinese have the right, in a popular assembly, to depose the governor whose authority seems despotic. The mandarin has thus every interest not to press the people too much.

Captain A. S. W. Colville, 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade, has been appointed Deputy Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Jersey. Captain Colville served in the Afghan War of 1878-9 with the Peshawur Valley Field Force, receiving the medal awarded. Colonel J. Duncan, now Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Dublin District, has been selected for the post of Deputy Quartermaster-General in Ireland, in succession to Colonel B. L. Forster, half-pay, Royal Artillery. Colonel Duncan served in the Indian Mutiny Campaign of 1857-58 (medal with two clasps, and a year's service for Lucknow). He also served with the Bechuanaland Expedition of 1884-85 as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at the base and lines of communication.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL SIR ROBERT J. HUSSEY VIVIAN, G.C.B.

General Sir Robert J. Hussey Vivian, G.C.B., died on Tuesday at his residence at Brighton, having outlived his wife only four days. The venerable general was born in 1802, and was educated at Burney's Ecole Militaire, Gosport, and entered the East India Company's military service in 1818. He saw much active service in his early career. He was actively engaged throughout the Burmese war of 1824-26, and was present at the fall and occupation of Rangoon, the assault of the stockades of Yelgeo, Jor-zong, and Kemmending, the repulse of the attack on the lines at Rangoon, affairs in the Panglang River, the attack and capture of the stockades of Thantaba'in, the attacks on the lines at Rangoon, under Bunda Ola, where he was wounded, the action of Kokein, the assault and capture of Zimbike, affairs near Prome and and Patnagah, the Storming of Malown, and the battle of Pagamew. He commanded the force which captured the fort of Nepaunee, held by a body of insurgent Arabs, in 1841, for which service he received the thanks of the Government Board and the Commander-in-Chief. In 1855, during the Russian War, he organized and commanded the Turkish contingent of 20,000 men, and occupied the position of Kertch during the winter. For his services on that occasion he was made a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath. He was Adjutant-General of the Madras Army from 1849 to 1854. In 1856 he was appointed a director of the East India Company, a member of the Council of India in September, 1858, and chairman of the Military Committee in 1860. The late general was made colonel in September, 1851; major-general, November, 1854; lieutenant general, October, 1862; and general in November, 1870, but was placed on the retired list in October, 1877. He had been colonel of the 102nd (Royal Dublin Fusiliers) Regiment since September 1862; and was nominated a Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, in 1871. The late Sir Robert married in 1846, Mrs. Gordon, widow of Captain Gordon, of the Madras Army.

MAJOR-GENERAL JOHN DAWSON.

Major-General John Dawson, late of the Bengal Staff Corps, died on the 24th ult. at his residence in Apsley-terrace, Acton, aged 62 years. He entered the military service of the East India Company, on their Bengal establishment, in December, 1841, and was posted to the 43rd Regiment of Native Light Infantry, then just returned from service in Afghanistan under General Sir William Nott, the successful defender of Candahar. As a subaltern he took part in the battle of Maharajpore, fought in the State of Gwalior under Sir Hugh Gough, for which he received the decoration of the bronze star, and during the campaign on the Sutlej, in 1846, he was engaged in the battle of Subraon. In 1849 he was promoted to a lieutenancy, and in May, 1850, was appointed assistant engineer in the Public Works Department at Simla. He was transferred to Oude in 1856, and appointed executive engineer at Fyzabad; in the same year he was promoted to the brevet rank of captain, but did not attain that rank in his regiment till 1859. In 1857, during the Indian Mutiny, he was actively engaged in the operations against the rebels in Bengal, and received a medal for his services. He joined the Bengal Staff Corps, in the rank of major, in 1861, and was promoted to be lieutenant-colonel in 1867. In March, 1870, he was appointed an executive engineer of the first grade in the Department of Public Works, with which branch of the service he continued to be connected during the rest of his Indian career. He became colonel in the Army in 1872, and finally retired from the service, with the honorary rank of major-general, on June 12, 1879. Among those who followed his remains to the grave were Captain H. L. Dawson, Mr. Arnold Dawson, Major-General Watts, Sir G. Birdwood, Lieut.-General Dawson, and Surgeon-General Francis.

RAJAH RAJENDRO MULLICK.

The death is announced of Rajah Rajendro Mullick, Rai Bahadur, the head of the great Mullick family, and president of the Shooburno Bonick Shova. After a long illness and gradual decay, the venerable gentleman quietly passed away on the 14th ult., at the age of seventy-six. The Rajah (the Indian Daily News says), was an adopted son. The widow of Baboo Nilmani Mullick, a lady of very charitable disposition, bestowed great care upon him, and he seems to have inherited her charitable and benevolent disposition. He was the twentieth in descent from the founder of the family. He was always of a very humble and retiring disposition. But it was impossible that he should be unnoticed during the terrible Orissa famine, where he was quietly and unostentatiously engaged in administering relief to thousands of the poor who flocked to the city. He fed 5,000 daily at his own house, besides contributing liberally to the general funds. He has always been ready to minister to the poor, and has daily fed 500 people for many years—in this following the practice of his charitable mother. His liberality in this way led the Government in 1867 to bestow upon him the title of Rai Bahadur. On the proclamation of the Empire, he received a certificate on the maidan at Calcutta, a most inadequate recognition of his deserts, and, as we pointed out at the time, almost a cruel kindness. This, however, was compensated the following year, when Lord Lytton conferred upon him the more suitable title of Rajah Bahadur, with a sunnud and khilut. The Rajah has always been a student of natural history, and has medals and diplomas from several European Societies. When the present Earl of Derby as Lord Stanley visited India, he called on the Rajah as a brother-naturalist, the Derby Menagerie at Knowsley leading to community of tastes, and we believe they frequently exchanged specimens. The liberality of the Rajah has been shown in always throwing open his grounds and collection to visitors at all times, and he has conferred great advantage upon the neighbourhood by buying up the land and making a very large open space as a place of recreation. Increasing years and infirmities have prevented his activity of late; but have never diminished his interest in the welfare of the poor. He has never been a public man in the sense of taking part in public life; but in the unostentatious exercise of benevolence he has been most exemplary. He is succeeded by his son, Kumar Devendro Mullick, who possesses many of the characteristics of his father, and is a man of varied accomplishments, and well fitted for the position to which he has attained.

LIAISON OFFICIALS.—The Salaries Commission indites some sarcastic remarks for the delectation of those district officers who do not open their official letters themselves. In one district the Commissioners found that the daily dak was received and opened by a Deputy Collector, and the Collector did not see any of the letters on the day of their arrival. This, they observe, is an exceedingly bad system, and they wonder how any Collector who takes an interest in his work can endure to run the risk of being kept in ignorance of Government orders for days together. In another district the Collector was found to employ his head clerk to open his letters in his presence. "If the Collector," says the Commissioner, "is afraid of soiling his fingers by tearing open the covers, he can employ his chapprassi to do this, but to take the head clerk away from his work to open letters, merely for the Collector to put dates and initials to them, is an absurd waste of time." No less pungent is the notice taken of the sins of some officers in the drafting of official letters. Some of them, we are told, never write a single letter themselves. Others, who also it appears prefer to be told by their sariatdars what orders they ought to pass in cases like to be told by their head clerks what answers they ought to give to letters; for "we find in some districts that even though the Collector opens his letters himself, he merely puts the date and his initials on them, and sends them into the office. When he next sees these letters they come before him with a draft reply prepared in his office, and ready for his signature." The solemn oburgation is appended that "such a procedure requires no comment."

THE COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.—The Prince of Wales presided over the final meeting of the Royal Commission for the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, at Marlborough House, on the 30th ult., when the balance-sheet was presented. This shows a surplus of £35,235. The Inventions Exhibition showed a deficit of £5,964. There are yet a few unadjusted claims on the Indian and Colonial Exhibition to settle. The surplus is therefore to be drawn on to clear off the loss on the "Inventories," and a sum of £4,270 is to be invested in the hands of trustees as a reserve fund to meet "unforeseen contingencies." The free disposable balance of the "Coloneries" then will be reduced to £25,000, and that is to be handed over to the Imperial Institute. Among the receipts, the largest item is for "admissions." This is set down at £205,840, upwards of five million persons having passed the turnstiles whilst the exhibition was open. Royalties from refreshment contractors and others yielded £22,250. The sale of screens and Indian exhibits returned £4,437. Realisation of buildings and plant brought in £7,223. The concession for publishing catalogues of the official publications returned £2,000. Advertisements yielded £1,387, and cloak-room receipts £1,269. The receipts from the dining-room are set down at £888, and the sale of programmes at the opening ceremony brought in £324. When we come to the payments we find the outlay on buildings taken over from the "Inventories" to have been £36,228, of which £973 has been paid in salaries to the surveyor and his staff. Then £17,978 is put down for rent of other premises, such as the City offices, the exhibition buildings of 1851, the Royal Albert Hall, and the like. The parochial rates for fifteen months came to £4,430. But the cost of electric lighting furnishes a much heavier item of expense. Excluding the gardens (which cost £10,000 to light up), it came to £19,335. The gas bill is £2,222, and the item for "salaries and honoraria" stands at £14,070. Here we find among other entries that £3,986 went to the assistant secretary, accountants, and general staff. The assistant secretary and general staff for India got £3,936; the general superintendents, £675; the Indian superintendents and assistants, £964; the officials of the admission department, £348; the City and official agent's (Sir Somers Vine's) department, £1,680; the secretary to the Royal Commission an honorarium of £500. This suggests a question. The secretary to the Royal Commission was "lent" by the Science and Art Department. But he was allowed to retain his official salary, £950 a year, in that department all the time he was away from his duty. Therefore, whilst he was drawing £950 for doing no work in the Kensington Museum, he also got £500 for doing work at the exhibition.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally doleful and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGH, COLD, AB, BRONCHITIS, STHMA.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances deriving elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is a necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON. REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, St. Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in

NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMITATION SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, St. Russell St., W.C.
